The precise limits within which Her Majesty's Government agreed to abandon British Consular jurisdiction in Tunis were explained in Earl Granville's note to the French Ambassador of the 20th June, 1883, of which a copy was transmitted to Lord Lyons in a Foreign Office despatch dated the day following.

In that note Lord Granville informed M. Tissot that Her Majesty's Government were quite disposed to waive the rights of this country under the Capitulations and Treaties to the extent which might be necessary to give full scope to the exercise of civil and criminal jurisdiction over British subjects by the new French Tribunals, but they did not believe that it would be expedient to extend the change beyond what was required by the circumstances of the case.

* Colonial Office, June 11: to ditto, July 5, 1887.

The Order in Council of the 31st December, 1883, whereby British Consular jurisdiction was made to cease to the extent of the jurisdiction vested by law in the new French Tribunals, was privately submitted in draft to the French Government before its publication and approved by them.

The Order (of which a copy is inclosed) follows the terms of the Order in Council of the 5th February, 1876, whereby British Consular jurisdiction in Egypt was partially abolished on the opening of the Tribunals of the Reform.

Accordingly, the Order provides for the cesser of British Consular jurisdiction in Tunis, not absolutely, but only "as regards all such matters and cases as come within the jurisdiction of the French Tribunals" established in the Regency.

At the date of the Order the British Consular Court in the Regency had power (under "The Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881," and the Ottoman Order in Council, 1882) to apprehend British fugitives from justice who had escaped from any part of the British dominions, and to cause them to be returned to the place from which they had escaped.

Similarly, under section 263 of the Levant Order in Council of the 12th December, 1873, the British Consular Court had power to arrest British fugitives from any part of the Ottoman dominions, and to return them to the place from which they had escaped.

It is conceived that none of these fugitives, whether from the British or Ottoman dominions, could be dealt with by the new French Tribunals in Tunis, their alleged crimes or offences having been committed out of the Regency.

Nor could they be surrendered by the French Government under the Extradition Treaty between Great Britain and France, that Treaty having no application in Tunis.

It appears, therefore, that the arrest of such fugitives, and their conveyance out of the Regency, is one of those "matters and cases" which do not come within the jurisdiction of the French Tribunals, and which remain within the original British Consular jurisdiction.

Her Majesty's Government have no desire to revive in any degree the exercise of British Consular jurisdiction in Tunis, but they are anxious to provide against a failure of justice, and in the present case it is manifest that the Regency would become a refuge for British fugitive criminals unless some method be adopted to secure their speedy return to the place from which they may have escaped.

I have to request you to lay these facts before the French Government, and to inquire whether the French Tribunals in Tunis are now empowered by law to exercise the jurisdiction which was, at the date of the Order in Council of the 31st December, 1883, vested in the British Consular Courts with respect to British fugitive offenders taking refuge in the Regency, and, if not, whether the French Government are prepared to take measures to secure the apprehension and return of such fugitives to the place from which they have escaped.

If such powers are not vested in the French Tribunals, or cannot be conferred on them, the consequence would seem to be that Her Majesty's Government are entitled to claim the right for British Consuls in Tunis to continue to exercise the jurisdiction in question.

I am, &c.

My Lord,

Mixed marriages by Consuls. Proposed Circular to Consuls.

WE were honoured with the commands of the Secretary of State signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 7th ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to the celebration of mixed marriages by Her Majesty's Consular officers, under the provisions of the Consular Marriages Act (12 & 13 Vict., cap. 68), a matter in respect to which questions causing considerable embarrassment and difficulty had from time to time arisen.

Circular to Embassies, &c., as to requiring marriage by "lex loci," and certificate of its validity.

That in the analogous case of mixed marriages celebrated at Her Majesty's Embassies and Legations under the provisions of the Diplomatic Marriages Act (4 Geo. IV, cap. 91), it had lately been found necessary, by reason of the disastrous consequences which had in some instances ensued, owing to the fact that marriages so solemnized, unless preceded by a marriage valid by the "lex loci contractûs," were not in themselves necessarily valid out of Her Majesty's dominions, to issue a Circular (a copy of which was inclosed), requesting Her Majesty's Ambassadors and Ministers, before authorizing any mixed marriage at their respective Embassies and Legations, to require that a previous marriage should take place according to the "lex loci," and that a certificate should be produced under the hand of the Representative of the nation to which the foreigner belonged that such marriage was recognized as binding by the laws of his country.

Propose to send similar Circular to Consuls.

That the same principles appeared to apply with equal force to mixed marriages celebrated by Her Majesty's Consular Officers, whose powers, under the "Consular Marriages Act," were merely facultative, and that it would accordingly seem advisable that they also should be instructed to decline to celebrate mixed marriages, except on the conditions laid down in the Circular already issued to Her Majesty's Diplomatic Representatives with respect to mixed marriages at Embassies and Legations.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would favour the Secretary of State with our opinion as to whether it was advisable to issue to Consular officers a Circular similar in its terms to that which had already been forwarded to Her Majesty's Diplomatic Representatives, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the question.

In obedience to the commands of the Secretary of State, we have the honour to report—

Not advisable to send proposed Circular to Consuls.

That in our opinion it is not advisable to issue to the Consular Officers the proposed Circular letter.

The Act of 1849 (12 & 13 Vict., cap. 68) prescribes the forms which are to be observed in Consular marriages, and the conditions which are to be fulfilled by persons desiring to avail themselves of its provisions.

We are of opinion that a Consul could not lawfully require the fulfilment of other conditions than those mentioned in the Act, and that the Secretary of State has no authority to vary those conditions.

Consuls should warn the parties, and advise previous marriage according to the "lex loci."

Having regard, however, to the questions which have been raised, and the circumstances referred to in the first paragraph of the proposed Circular, it is most important in cases of mixed marriages that the Consuls should point out to the parties the possible risk of the marriage being held invalid in other countries, and the desirability of a marriage taking place according to the "lex loci contractûs.'

Memorandum by Mr. H. Jenkyns on Marriages abroad.—(Sent to Sir J. Pauncefote privately.)

Marriages of British subjects abroad.

THE Law respecting marriages of British subjects out of the kingdom is stated generally in the Report in 1868 of the Marriage Commission. (See Parliamentary Papers, 1868, vol. xxxii. Foreign Office, No. 1469.)

THE OCEANA GROUP PUBLISHERS

English common law prior to 1753.

Before the Marriage Act of 1753, commonly known as Lord Hardwicke's Act (26 Geo. II, cap. 33), the English common law was that a marriage contracted per verba de presenti in the presence of a minister in Holy Orders, whether of the Church of England or the Church of Rome, was a valid marriage.

The effect of a contract of marriage per verba de presenti not in the presence of a minister in Holy Orders was open to some doubt. For some purposes it was legal, for some purposes not.

Common law applies to marriages abroad.

The Marriage Act of 1753 contained a provision that it should not apply to marriages beyond the seas, and the existing Act (4 Geo. IV, cap. 76) is limited to England. Consequently, a domiciled Englishman leaving England carries with him not that Act, but the English common law as to marriage unaffected by that Act, and unless precluded by the lex loci, can marry in accordance with that common law. Therefore, he can so marry on board one of Her Majesty's ships when not prevented by the lex loci.

Law as to marriages on ships of war in foreign waters.

But as a ship of war maintains its territorial character in a foreign port the lex loci would not apply, and the marriage on board the ship, whether in such port or on the high seas at the time of solemnization, would be valid if solemnized in accordance with the old common law between British subjects. But if the ship were in a port of a foreign country, some doubt would arise if one of the parties were a subject of that foreign country.

The Consular Marriage Act (12 & 13 Vict., cap. 68) enables marriages to be solemnized before British Consuls in accordance with that Act, but does not exclude any other form of valid marriage, such as a marriage on board a Queen's ship, or a marriage in an Embassy house.

Consular marriages more desirable.

Legally, therefore, there seems nothing to prevent a marriage being duly solemnized between British subjects on board one of Her Majesty's ships in a foreign port at which there is a Consul capable of solemnizing marriages. But no doubt it would be more regular in such a case that a marriage should be solemnized before the Consul instead of on board ship. And as there is no statutory provision in the case of marriages on board ship for the proper notices and other preliminaries of marriage being observed, nor for the proper registration of them,* it seems desirable that in such cases the marriages should be solemnized by the Consul, and not on board Her Majesty's ship; and this view has been adopted in the Queen's Regulations.

Opinion as to validity of such marriages by—

In 1878, the opinion of the then Law Officers, Sir J. Holker and Sir Hardinge Giffard, together with the Admiralty Counsel, Mr. Staveley Hill, was taken on the above subjects, and they reported as follows:—

(1) Clergymen.

"We are of opinion that marriages solemnized on board Her Majesty's ships by ministers in Holy Orders, according to the rites of the Church of England or Scotland, whether there is a Consul authorized to act under 12 & 13 Vict., cap. 68, or no, are valid.

(2) Roman priests and dissenters.

"Secondly, we are of opinion that such marriages would be valid in cases where such marriages were solemnized by priests of the Roman Catholic Church, but not where celebrated by ministers of any Nonconformist body.

(3) Captains of Queen's ships.

"Thirdly, such marriages would not, in our opinion, in any case be valid if solemnized by the Captain of a Queen's ship."

In consequence of that opinion, the Act of 42 & 43 Vict., cap. 29, was passed.

Their invalidity uncertain.

From what has been stated above, it will be seen that the invalidity of a marriage solemnized in the presence of the Commanding Officer of one of Her Majesty's ships, or on board a merchant-vessel, is not quite so certain as stated in the above opinion. It partly depends on the still unsettled question as to the validity of a marriage contracted before 1753 per verba de presenti without the presence of a minister in Holy Orders, and partly on the extent to which a marriage by habit and repute may be proved.

Above opinion does not apply in the United Kingdom or British Colony.

The above opinion of the Law Officers was, as the documents accompanying the case show, evidently intended to apply only to Her Majesty's ships when at sea or in a foreign port. It does not decide whether marriages solemnized on board one of Her Majesty's ships when in a British port, whether in the United Kingdom or a Colony, are valid without compliance with the lex loci of the port. I think the lex loci must exclude the English common law, especially if one of the parties is domiciled in the place.

Nationality of parties;

The above opinion of the Law Officers does not refer to the nationality of the parties between whom marriages are solemnized; and although there can be no doubt as to their opinion applying where both the parties are English, great doubt must arise where one of the parties is a subject of the foreign country in the port of which the ship is lying, or where the husband is not an Englishman. For as the validity of the marriage depends upon the doctrine that an Englishman carries with him the English common law with respect to marriage, that doctrine could not apply where the husband is not an Englishman, and perhaps also where the wife is not an Englishwoman.

* See Report of Commission as to record of these marriages in the Registry of the Bishop of London.

and their domicile affects validity.

Also, where the husband is domiciled in some part of the Queen's dominions in which the common law is not the English common law, further doubt must arise as to the validity of the marriage.

Probability of difficulties in event of marriage of a foreigner on board ship of war.

Where Her Majesty's ship is lying in a port of a foreign country, a difficulty might easily arise with that foreign country if one of the subjects of that country were married on board that ship. I need hardly point out that under the Consular Marriages Act, great care has to be taken as to the marrying of persons of foreign nationality.

Scotch law different.

I have referred only to English law and Englishmen. The Irish law is, I believe, much the same as the English. But the Scotch law is different.

Marriages by Scotch ministers.

It may be doubted whether a minister of the Church of Scotland is a minister in Holy Orders for the purpose of English common law. By Scotch law a valid marriage may, in certain cases, be effected by consent signified in the presence of witnesses. A Scotchman presumably carries this law with him.

Domicile affects validity.

The validity of a marriage, at any rate so far as respects the personal capacity of the parties to contract a marriage, often depends on the domicile of the parties. The validity therefore of a marriage on board ship may depend on whether the parties are domiciled in England or Scotland, or in a Colony, or possibly in a foreign country.

Regulations in need of revision.

It appears to me that the Queen's Regulations for the navy require revision with reference to the above points.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received June 20.)

My Lord,

Royal Courts of Justice, June 18, 1887.

Proposed Circular respecting mixed marriages at Embassies and Legations in Mahommedan and heathen countries.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two alternative drafts, marked respectively (B) and (C), for an instruction to Her Majesty's Diplomatic Representatives in Mahommedan and heathen countries, with reference to the celebration of mixed marriages at their respective Embassies and Legations, which it was proposed should be substituted for the Circular (A) of the 31st July, 1886, which had been already addressed to them upon the same subject.

That when the Circular (A) was issued generally to all Her Majesty's Diplomatic Representatives abroad, the difficulty which would arise in its application to Mahommedan and other non-Christian States had escaped attention.

Difficulty in carrying out proviso in Circular of July 1886 as to previous marriage according to the lex loci. Submits draft Circulars (B) and (C) for approval.

That it had, however, been found impossible in practice to carry out, with respect to mixed marriages at Her Majesty's Embassies or Legations in such States, the proviso contained in the last paragraph thereof, which required as a condition precedent to the celebration of a marriage at the particular Embassy or Legation, that a previous marriage should have already taken place according to the lex loci contractus.

That it appeared, therefore, desirable to withdraw the Circular (A) in the case of the particular Embassies and Legations mentioned above, and to substitute therefor a Circular in the terms either of the draft (B) or of the draft (C), inclosed, or in such other form (if any) as might appear to us better adapted to meet the circumstances of the case.

That drafts (B) and (C) differed from Circular (A) only as regarded the last paragraphs of each respectively.

That it had been suggested that the words "if practicable" which occurred in the last paragraph of draft (B) might possibly be open to objection, as giving a somewhat unnecessarily wide discretion to Her Majesty's Representatives, in the exercise of which they might find themselves occasionally embarrassed, and that inasmuch as a benefit was conferred upon foreigners by allowing them to be married at British

Embassies and Legations, it might fairly be insisted that every possible precaution should be taken to secure the recognition of the mixed marriage.

That an alternative draft (C) of a somewhat stricter character had therefore been prepared, and that your Lordship would be glad to be informed whether we considered that latter draft, or any modification of it, preferable to the draft (B) in the case of the particular Embassies and Legations above mentioned.

That Sir T. V. Lister was to request that we would take the two draft instructions (B) and (C) into our consideration, together with the other papers transmitted therewith, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the form best adapted to meet the requirements of the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Draft (C) preferable.

That in our opinion draft (C) will best fulfil the purpose desired.

Circular addressed by the Earl of Rosebery to Her Majesty's Representatives abroad.

My Lord,
Sir,

Foreign Office, July 31, 1886.

THE attention of Her Majesty's Government has been recently called to two cases of mixed marriages between British subjects and Swiss citizens, which, although duly celebrated at Her Majesty's Embassy at Paris under the Act 4 Geo. IV, cap. 91, have been declared null and void in Switzerland, under Article 54, paragraph 3, of the Federal Constitution, it having been ascertained that the validity of mixed marriages celebrated at the British Embassy at Paris is not recognized by French law.

It has hitherto been the practice at Paris, in the case of mixed marriages, to obtain from the Representative of the nation to which the foreigner belongs a certificate that the marriage at the British Embassy will be deemed valid by the laws of his country; and it appears that such certificate had been procured on the occasion of the two marriages above referred to.

In order to obviate, as far as possible, the risk of the validity of such marriages being disputed in future, it is important that they should be celebrated not only under the British Statute, but also, so far as circumstances will admit, in a manner which will satisfy the laws of the nation to which the foreigner belongs.

I have therefore to request that, before authorizing any mixed marriage at your , will require that a previous marriage shall take place according to the lex loci, and that a certificate be produced under the hand of the Representative of the nation to which the foreigner belongs, that such marriage is recognized as legal and binding by the laws of his country.

(C.)

My Lord,
Sir,

Foreign Office, , 1887.

THE attention of Her Majesty's Government has been recently called to two cases of mixed marriages between British subjects and Swiss citizens, which, although duly celebrated at Her Majesty's Embassy at Paris under the Act 4 Geo. IV, cap. 91, have been declared null and void in Switzerland, under Article 54, paragraph 3, of the Federal Constitution, it having been ascertained that the validity of mixed marriages celebrated at the British Embassy at Paris is not recognized by French law.

It has hitherto been the practice at Paris in the case of mixed marriages to obtain from the Representative of the nation to which the foreigner belongs a certificate that the marriage at the British Embassy will be deemed valid by the laws of his country, and it appears that such certificate had been procured on the occasion of the two marriages above referred to.

will require that a previous marriage which is recognized as legal by the law of the nation to which the foreigner belongs shall have taken place, and that a certificate to that effect under the hand of the Representative of such nation shall, if possible, be produced.

In any case, however, in which you are satisfied that such previous marriage is in the circumstances impracticable, you may at your discretion dispense with it on being furnished with a certificate under the hand of the Representative of the nation to which the foreigner belongs at the Court to which your Excellency is you are accredited (or, should there be no such Representative at that Court, under the hand of some such Representative elsewhere) that the mixed marriage which it is proposed to solemnize at your will itself and without any preliminary or other ceremony be recognized as legal by the law of such nation.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, July 22, 1887.

Proposed instructions to Governors, &c., of Colonies for communication to Commanders-in-chief in event of war.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 11th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a copy (marked A) of an instruction which it was proposed at once to issue to the Governors and Administrators of Her Majesty's Colonies and dependencies, and which, in the event of certain contingencies therein indicated, would be by them forthwith communicated to Her Majesty's Commanders-in-chief on the various foreign stations for their direction and guidance.

That Sir P. Currie was to request that we would take that instruction, and the papers bearing upon it,[*] which were also transmitted therewith, into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether its terms were such as were, in the circumstances, right and proper.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Approve instructions A, B, and C, as altered.

That, as altered, we approve the proposed instructions marked A, B, and C. As regards D, it would be necessary to respect Treaty obligations, if any, with neutral nations, upon whose vessels such goods might be, or to whom such goods might belong.

Opinion on right to prohibit export of warlike articles enumerated in D.

In our opinion, the export of the articles named ought not to be interfered with unless such articles are required for our own naval purposes, or for purposes of defence, or are intended for the service of the enemy, or destined for enemy's ports, or unless there is reasonable apprehension that they may fall into the hands of the enemy, or be ultimately used for his service.

The Customs Act of 1876 (39 & 40 Vict., cap. 36, sec. 138) and the Act of 1879 (42 & 43 Vict., cap. 21, sec. 8) give power to prohibit the export of classes of goods which cover all those in clause D.

List in D not exhaustive.

This prohibition, however, must be by Proclamation or Order in Council, and the statutable power does not extend (see section 151 of the Act of 1876) to British possessions abroad which have made entire provision for the management and regulation of the Customs of such possessions. The list in D is not exhaustive.

We have, &c.
(Signed) RICHARD E. WEBSTER.
EDWARD CLARKE.

Opinion of Solicitor-General on right to prohibit exports.

I wish to add that, in my opinion, the right to prohibit exports exists without reference to the conditions as to destination, &c., which we have mentioned above, and exists independently of the Customs Acts.

[In reply to the following Home Office letter, the Law Officers gave, on the 27th July, 1887, their opinion as below:—]

Sir, Whitehall, July 6, 1887.

I AM directed by the Secretary of State to transmit to you herewith the inclosed case which has been prepared for the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown as to the status of the children of an alien, naturalized under the Act of 1870, born abroad at a date subsequent to that of their father's naturalization; and I am to request that you will lay the same before the Attorney- and Solicitor- General, and favour the Secretary of State with their opinion thereon.

I am, &c.
(Signed) E. LEIGH PEMBERTON.

---

Case for the Law Officers.

Status of children born abroad after the naturalization of their father.

The Law Officers are requested to advise the Secretary of State as to the status of children born outside the United Kingdom of an alien naturalized under the Act of 1870 in Great Britain, such children being born after the naturalization of their father.

Act of 1870 on the subject.

The enactment to be referred to is 33 & 34 Vict., cap. 14, section 7, paragraph 3, describing the effect of a certificate of naturalization:—

"An alien to whom a certificate of naturalization is granted shall in the United Kingdom be entitled to all political and other rights, powers, and privileges, and be subject to all obligations, to which a natural-born British subject is entitled or subject in the United Kingdom, with this qualification, that he shall not, when within the limits of the foreign State of which he was a subject previously to obtaining his certificate of naturalization, be deemed to be a British subject unless he has ceased to be a subject of that State in pursuance of the laws thereof, or in pursuance of a Treaty to that effect."

This paragraph appears to be defectively worded, since if the rights conferred on the person naturalized are limited to such rights as a natural-born British subject is entitled to in the United Kingdom, it is useless to append a qualification that the rights shall not operate in some place not in the United Kingdom. It is believed that the words "in the United Kingdom" were inserted by inadvertence.

Section 10 (5) relates to the status of the children of a naturalized person, and provides that:—

"Where the father, or the mother being a widow, has obtained a certificate of naturalization in the United Kingdom, every child of such father or mother who during infancy has become resident with such father or mother in any part of the United Kingdom shall be deemed to be a naturalized British subject."

It is to be observed that, under the circumstances specified, the child has the status not of a natural-born British subject, but of a naturalized British subject.

It applies only to children born before naturalization.

The enactment, however, it seems probable (regard being had to the two previous paragraphs), relates only to children who were born before the naturalization of the naturalized person, not to those who were born subsequent to the naturalization.

Law as to children born after naturalization.

If this view is correct the question then arises, what is the status of children born outside the United Kingdom after the naturalization of their father? The answer would seem to depend on the conjoint effect of paragraph 3 (already set out) of section 7 of "The Naturalization Act, 1870," declaring the naturalized person to be entitled to all the political and other rights to which a natural-born British subject is entitled in the United Kingdom, and 4 Geo. II, cap. 21, which deals with the status of children of natural-born British subjects, enacting that:—

"All children born out of the legiance that is out of the domain of the Crown of England or which shall hereafter be born out of such legiance, whose fathers were or shall be natural-born subjects of the Crown of England or of Great Britain at the time of the birth of such children respectively, shall and may, by virtue of the said recited clause in the Act of the seventh year of the reign of her said late Majesty and of this present Act, be adjudged and taken to be, and all such children are hereby declared to be, natural-born subjects of the Crown of Great Britain to all intents, constructions, and purposes whatsoever."

Previous case in 1860.

In the year 1860, the question arose as to the status of a child born in a foreign country of an alien naturalized under the earlier Act 7 & 8 Vict., cap. 66—such child being born after naturalization, and the parent being abroad at the time,* and the Law Officers advised the Secretary of State that such child would not answer the description of a child of a natural-born British subject, and therefore would be an alien, and not a natural-born British subject.†

Questions to be decided.

The questions for the Law Officers to determine are:—

1. Whether 33 Vict., cap. 14, section 10 (5) applies to children of a naturalized alien born after the date of such naturalization? If not,

2. Whether the children born out of British dominions of an alien naturalized under the Act of 1870, such children being born after the naturalization, are natural-born British subjects, naturalized British subjects, or aliens?

The cases and opinions of the Law Officers of the 13th August, 1860, and 13th May, 1884,‡ above referred to, are left herewith.

A copy of Report of the Royal Commission on Naturalization is also left herewith.

The Attorney- and Solicitor- General are requested to favour the Secretary of State with their opinion on the case above set out.

Act of 1870 applies to children born both before and after naturalization. Their status depends on their residence in the United Kingdom.

In our opinion, the language of 33 & 34 Vict., cap. 14, section 10, subsection 5, although not free from obscurity, is large enough to cover, and should be held to apply to, the case of children born after, as well as those born before, naturalization. Such children if, during infancy, they become resident with the naturalized father or mother in the United Kingdom, are to be deemed naturalized British subjects. If they do not become so resident they remain aliens.

Children of aliens born before naturalization of their father are aliens.

1. By the Act 7 & 8 Vict., cap. 66, section 6, it is enacted that on obtaining the certificate and taking the oath prescribed, and an alien residing, &c., in Great Britain, shall enjoy all the rights and capacities which a natural-born subject of the United Kingdom can enjoy,—or transmit, words which are prospective only and may give to the children of an alien born in the United Kingdom after naturalization the status of natural-born subjects; but there is nothing in the Statute or in the Law which can alter or affect the status of the children of an alien born out of the Queen's dominions and before the naturalization of the parent. Such children, although infants at the date of the naturalization, are still aliens, and must obtain certificates of naturalization to entitle them to the rights and capacities of a natural-born British subject.

Child, born abroad, of a naturalized alien is an alien.

2. With respect to the second question, by the terms of the certificate of naturalization a naturalized alien does not carry with him into foreign countries the rights and capacities of a natural-born British subject (except the benefit of a British passport), and, consequently, the child of such naturalized alien born in a foreign country, the parent being abroad, would not answer the description of the child of a natural-born British subject.

Such child therefore is, in our opinion, an alien, and not a natural-born British subject.

My Lord,

Consular Fees.

Proposed Order in Council.

(A.) General.
B.) For China, Japan and Corea.

WE were honoured with Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, with reference to two proposed Orders in Council establishing new Tables of Consular Fees.

That that marked (A) was for the General Consular Service, and was in substitution for the Orders in Council dated the 26th March, 1885, and marked (B), while the draft Order marked (C) was for China, Japan, and Corea, and was in substitution for the Order in Council of the 26th March, 1885, marked (D).

That Sir Julian Pauncefote also inclosed a copy of the Act 6 Geo. IV, cap. 87, (marked E), under the authority of which, and of the other Acts referred to in the preamble thereto, those Orders were proposed to be issued.

That the draft Orders had been already submitted to and approved by the Treasury; and that Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether they were right and proper to be submitted for ratification to the Queen in Council.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Paragraphs as to power of diminishing fees,

That, in our opinion, paragraph 8 of the proposed Orders should be struck out.

Section 4 of the Act 6 Geo. IV, cap. 87, is distinct as to the mode in which fees are to be diminished or wholly abolished, or the payment of any smaller fee established and authorized. Paragraph 8 proposes that this power of diminishing the fees shall be carried out by Consular Regulations, or the instructions of a Secretary of State. This is, in our judgment, contrary to the express provisions of the Act, and paragraph 8 should therefore be omitted.

and approval of Treasury, should be omitted.

We think the recital of the approval of the fees by the Commissioners of the Treasury unnecessary and undesirable.

As to effect on existing Orders.

We presume that the effect of the present Orders upon other existing Orders in Council which are left unrepealed has been considered. See Hertslet's Treaties, vols. xi to xiv, and probably others.

Case for the Law Officers.

Children of naturalized aliens.

The Law Officers are referred to the opinion* they have recently given on the operation of section 10 (5) of "The Naturalization Act, 1870," 33 Vict., cap. 14.

In connection with this subject a further question has arisen, on which the Secretary of State desires to be advised by the Law Officers.

They are considered as naturalized British subjects.

(a.) Under section 10 (5) it is not disputed that every child who, being an infant at the date of the naturalization of the father, has become resident with the father in the United Kingdom, is to be deemed a naturalized British subject, and the practice of the Home Office has been to insert his name in the father's certificate, and no subsequent question has ever been raised as to the naturalization of the child, although, after the naturalization of the father, the child while still an infant might cease to be a resident with the father in the United Kingdom. In fact, the naturalization of the child dated from a fixed point of time (the father's naturalization), and was, so to speak, final.

(b.) The recent opinion of the Law Officers decides that the same subsection 10 (5) applies to children born after the date of the naturalization of the father, although it may be difficult to fix the precise moment from which the naturalization of the child commences.

As to loss of such status by non-residence in the United Kingdom.

The question now raised applies to both classes (a) and (b), viz., whether the naturalization so acquired by a child (whether born before or after the naturalization of the father) can, subsequently to its acquisition, be lost by the child ceasing, whilst still an infant, to be resident with his father in the United Kingdom.

For present purposes, it is assumed that temporary absences would not constitute a cesser of residence.

* See No. 24.

It may be pointed out that the words of the Statute are, "Every child who during infancy has become resident;" the Statute does not go on to say, and who during infancy continues to be resident.

The question for the Law Officers is whether the naturalization acquired by a child under section 10 (5) (whether the child has been born before or after the father's naturalization) can, subsequently to its acquisition, be lost by the child ceasing, whilst still an infant, to be resident with his father in the United Kingdom.

The Attorney- and Solicitor- General are requested to favour the Secretary of State with their opinion, as asked in Mr. Lushington's letter.

Opinion.

Status of British subject not lost by cessation of residence.

In our opinion, a child having once acquired the status of a naturalized British subject does not lose that status by ceasing to be resident in the United Kingdom.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, August 24, 1887.

Power of an Acting Vice-Consul to celebrate marriages under the Vice-Consul's Warrant.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, the papers noted in the accompanying list, with reference to the question of the competency of a person acting for a Vice-Consul furnished with a Marriage Warrant to celebrate marriages under the Warrant of the Vice-Consul whom he is temporarily replacing, although he be not himself provided with any Warrant from the Secretary of State entitling him personally to celebrate marriages.

That the question appeared to depend entirely upon the construction to be placed on section 19 of "The Consular Marriages Act, 1849" (12 & 13 Vict., cap. 68), as modified or explained by section 3 of "The Consular Marriage Act, 1868" (31 & 32 Vict., cap. 61).

Opinions of Law Officers.

That in 1873 the then Law Officers reported that, having considered "The Consular Marriages Act, 1849," and particularly the 19th section, they were of opinion that "a person acting for a Vice-Consul is not a person who can legally solemnize marriages under 'The Consular Marriages Act, 1849,' though the Consul in whose place he is acting may hold a Warrant authorizing such Vice-Consul to solemnize marriages."

That in 1874 again, a change of Government having meanwhile taken place, the Law Officers to the new Administration were consulted on the same question, and reported that, in their opinion, "a person acting for a British Vice-Consul furnished with a Marriage Warrant, but such person himself not being furnished with a Marriage Warrant, cannot legally celebrate marriages under the provisions of 'The Consular Marriage Act' (12 & 13 Vict., cap. 68);" and that successive Secretaries of State had hitherto guided their action in accordance with the views expressed in those Reports.

That it would, however, be seen that on each of those occasions the opinion of the Law Officers was entirely based upon the construction of the Act of 1849, and that their attention did not appear to have been directed to the subsequent enactment of 1868, section 3 of which might, as was thought, have a sufficiently important bearing on the matter to justify, on the supposition that it was not before our predecessors in 1874, a further reference of the question to us.

As to meaning of Marriage Acts.

That it seemed hardly probable that the Legislature could have intended (whatever they might in fact have done) to make any distinction between a person acting for a Consul furnished with a Marriage Warrant and a person acting for a Vice-Consul also similarly provided; while in actual working the insistance on that distinction caused serious practical inconvenience.

That section 3 of "The Consular Marriage Act, 1868," provides that "every person acting, or legally authorized to act, in the place of a British Consul, such Consul being duly authorized to solemnize and register marriages between persons, . . . . . shall be deemed to be a British Consul duly authorized for all the purposes of the said recited Act" (i.e., 12 & 13 Vict., cap. 68).

That the term "Consul" was not made the subject of definition in "The Consular Marriage Act, 1868," and would appear, therefore, to have the same meaning and extent as when employed in the principal Act recited and referred to therein.

That by section 19 of that Act (12 & 13 Vict., cap. 68) it is provided that . . . . . "in any foreign place where there is no British Consul resident, any Vice-Consul or Consular Agent who shall be directed or authorized . . . . . by one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State to solemnize and register marriages in such place shall, in the country or place in which he is so appointed to reside, or in which he is directed or authorized to solemnize and register marriages as aforesaid, by a Consul duly authorized for the purposes of this Act; and in the construction of this Act the term 'Consul' shall . . . . . be construed to mean a Consul so authorized."

That it would, therefore, appear to your Lordship to be at any rate open to some doubt whether, if section 19 of 12 & 13 Vict., cap. 68, and section 3 of 31 & 32 Vict., cap. 61, be construed together, a person acting in the place of a Vice-Consul or Consular Agent in any foreign place where there is no British Consul was not to be deemed, for all the purposes of "The Consular Marriage Act, 1849," while so acting, to be a British Consul duly authorized to solemnize and register marriages.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the question submitted in his letter, and with any special observations which we might have to offer on the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Agree with previous Law Officers as to inability of Acting Vice-Consul.

That we concur in the Reports of our predecessors in 1873 and 1874.

We see no reason for supposing that they overlooked the provisions of the Act of 1868 (31 & 32 Vict., cap. 61), as, in our opinion, the words of section 3 of that Act do not cure the defect, if defect it be, in the earlier Statute upon the terms of which their advice was founded.

We do not, however, think it unreasonable to suppose that Parliament intended to confine this very important function to the persons actually named in the 19th section of the principal Act.

We have, &c.

Consular Fees. Proposed Orders in Council.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 25th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to two proposed Orders in Council establishing new Tables of Consular Fees.

That in our letter of the 20th instant we reported that, in our opinion, paragraph 8 of the proposed Orders should be struck out.

That we pointed out that section 4 of the Act of George IV, cap. 87, was distinct as to the mode in which fees were to be diminished, or wholly abolished, or the payment of any smaller fee established and authorized; and that as paragraph 8 proposed that the power of diminishing the fees should be carried out by Consular

Regulations or the instructions of a Secretary of State, it was, in our judgment, contrary to the express provisions of the Act, and should therefore be struck out.

Proposed insertions as to dispensing with payment of fees.

That Sir T. V. Lister was directed by your Lordship to submit to us that, although the Orders might not confer any power of remitting fees, the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury thought it of great importance, and so did your Lordship, that the Orders should in some way recognize the existence of such a power, and accordingly proposed the following substitute for paragraph 8, viz.: "Nothing in this Order shall limit Her Majesty's prerogative to dispense with the payment of fees in any case in which it may seem meet so to do."

That Sir T. V. Lister was to explain that, in your Lordship's opinion, it was undesirable that any special reference to the power of dispensing with the payment of fees in certain cases should appear in the Tables themselves which had to be exhibited in the public office of all Consuls and in other places.

That, looking to the terms of paragraph 7 and to the above proposed new paragraph 8, Sir T. V. Lister was to submit whether the words "with the concurrence of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury" might not properly be inserted after the word "State" in the last line but one of each Order.

That Sir T. V. Lister was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration; and that, as it was important that the Orders in Council should be issued at once, your Lordship would be much obliged if we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the two questions submitted in that letter, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case, at our earliest convenience.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Disapprove of proposed insertions.

That we are unable to approve of the insertion of the proposed words saving Her Majesty's prerogative to dispense with the payment of fees, as, in our opinion, the right to levy and dispense with such fees does not depend upon the prerogative of the Crown.

The question whether, in special cases, the payment of the fees should not be insisted upon is a practical matter, and should be made the subject of confidential instructions to the Consuls. It is, in our opinion, undesirable that any reference to such non-payment should appear upon the face of the Order.

We do not see any reason for the insertion of the proposed words in the last line but one of each Order. The Secretary of State will have to give directions under clauses 2 and 7. Clause 7 already provides that the directions shall be given with the concurrence of the Commissioners of the Treasury, and their concurrence cannot be required for the directions under clause 2 as to the date when the Orders shall come into operation.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received September 17.)

My Lord, Temple, September 15, 1887.

New Tables of Consular Fees. Proposed Orders in Council.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he had to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a further letter from the Treasury respecting the two proposed new Orders in Council establishing new Tables of Consular Fees.

That it might be convenient that Sir Julian Pauncefote should recapitulate that it was submitted to us in Sir Villiers Lister's letter of the 25th ultimo that although the Orders might not confer any power of remitting fees, the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury thought it of great importance that the Orders should in some way recognize the existence of such a power, and accordingly they proposed the following substitute for paragraph 8, viz.: "Nothing in this Order shall limit Her Majesty's prerogative to dispense with the payment of fees in any case in which it may seem meet so to do."

That in our letter of the 31st ultimo we reported to his Lordship that we were unable to approve of the insertion of the proposed words saving Her Majesty's prerogative to dispense with the payment of fees, as, in our opinion, the right to levy and dispense with such fees did not depend upon the prerogative of the Crown. That we pointed out that the question whether, in special cases, the payment of the fees should not be insisted upon was a practical matter, and should be made the subject of confidential instructions to the Consuls; and it was, in our opinion, undesirable that any reference to such non-payment should appear upon the face of the Order.

That we further reported that we did not see any reason for the insertion of the words, "with the concurrence of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury," after the word "State" in the last line but one of each Order.

New clause as to dispensing power proposed by Treasury.

That your Lordship caused our Report to be communicated to the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, and we would see in their Lordships' reply, dated the 10th instant, the reasons why, although they no longer pressed for the insertion of the words, "with the concurrence of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury," in the last line but one of the Order, if we retained our objection to them, they considered it desirable that the Orders in Council prescribing the Consular fees should in some way recognize the power of dispensing with their payment in certain cases, and suggesting whether paragraph 8 might not be worded as follows: "8. Nothing in this Order shall limit any right or power of dispensing with the payment of fees in any case in which one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, with the concurrence of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, may, on behalf of Her Majesty, authorize such dispensation."

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and as it was most important that the Orders in Council should, if possible, be submitted for ratification to the Queen in Council to be held at Balmoral on the 15th instant, your Lordship would be much obliged if we would favour your Lordship at our earliest convenience with our opinion as to whether the words suggested by the Lords of Her Majesty's Treasury might properly be used as a substitute for paragraph 8.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Adhere to previous opinion.

Clause now proposed not objectionable.

Object to words as to concurrence of Treasury.

That we retain the opinion that it is undesirable to insert any clause as to dispensing with fees in particular instances, and that it would be better to deal with this matter by confidential instructions to the Consuls, as suggested in our previous Report. The clause in its present form is not, however, open to the same objections as those previously suggested, and we should not be disposed to insist on its rejection. We retain our objection to the words, "with the concurrence of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury."

Sugar Conference. As to proposal for imposition of surtax on bountied sugar.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list with reference to a question which it was anticipated might shortly occupy the attention of the International Conference now sitting in London upon the subject of sugar bounties.

That it was considered probable that proposals would be laid before the Conference by the Representatives of one or more of the Powers who were parties thereto for the inclusion, amongst other terms of a Convention to be entered into by the Powers now in Conference, of a provision empowering the Contracting Parties to such a Convention, in the event of bounties being granted in countries not parties thereto upon the exportation of raw or refined sugars, to impose a surtax or countervailing duty on the importation of such sugars of and from those countries.

That the Convention of Paris, which was entered into on the 8th November, 1864, between Belgium, France, the Netherlands, and Great Britain for the purpose of regulating the drawbacks on sugar, contained a proviso (Article XIX) to the following effect:—

"The High Contracting Powers reserve to themselves to agree as to the steps to be taken for obtaining the adhesion of the Governments of other countries to the arrangements of the present Convention.

"In the event of bounties being granted in the said countries on the exportation of refined sugars, the High Contracting Parties will be at liberty to come to an understanding as to the surtax to be imposed on the importation of refined sugars of and from the said countries."

That the Convention, however (the duration of which was fixed at ten years by Article XXI thereof), expired by effluxion of time without any attempt having been made to impose such a surtax; and that the question whether its imposition by Great Britain would or would not be a contravention of her Treaty engagements under most-favoured-nation Articles entered into with countries not parties to the Convention, having thus never arisen in any practical form, appeared not to have been made the subject of careful consideration in its purely legal aspect.

That it would be observed that the provision in Article XIX of the now expired Convention of 1864 apparently made the imposition of the surtax contemplated therein contingent on an understanding or settlement to be previously arrived at by the High Contracting Parties conjointly, and also left it apparently competent for any one of the Signatories to the Convention, by refusing to come to an understanding with the remaining co-signatories, to prevent the imposition of the surtax by any one or more of the other Contracting Parties.

That it was thought that the terms of any Article which might be laid before the present Conference for consideration would probably be of a more stringent character, and that it might be proposed to include raw as well as refined sugar within the scope of its operation, and to provide that in the event of bounties being granted in any country on the exportation of raw or refined sugars any one of the High Contracting Parties should be at liberty to impose a corresponding surtax on the importation of such sugars of and from such country, or even to prohibit the importation of such sugar.

That it was moreover possible that the proposal might assume a compulsory form, and provide that, in the circumstances indicated above, each of the High Contracting Parties should be respectively bound to impose a corresponding surtax on sugar imported from such country, or to prohibit its importation.

Are inclosed drafts contrary to Treaty engagements?

or should they be modified?

That, in those circumstances, your Lordship would wish to be advised, for the information and assistance of the British Delegates to the Conference, whether proposals in any of the four forms (A), (B), (C), and (D), inclosed with Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter, or following their general lines, could, having regard to the existing Treaty engagements of this country, safely be accepted by the Delegates; and, if not, to what extent and in what respects it would, in our opinion, be necessary to modify them in order to bring them into accord with those engagements.

That a statement of the most-favoured-nation Articles now binding Great Britain would be found collected in a form convenient for reference in the Parliamentary Paper (E).

That the following Treaties had been concluded between Great Britain and foreign Powers since the expiry of the Convention of Paris of 1864, viz.:—

while, of the various most-favoured-nation Articles which were actually in force at the time when the Convention of Paris expired, Sir Julian Pauncefote was particularly to direct our attention to those contained in the Commercial Treaties between Great Britain and Russia of the 12th January, 1859 (Articles II, III, and X), and between Great Britain and Austria of the 5th December, 1876 (Articles II, III, and V).

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was also to call our special attention to Article III of the Treaty of the 28th February, 1882, between Great Britain and France, relating to prohibitions, which was as follows:—

"The High Contracting Parties engage not to enforce one against the other any prohibition of importation or exportation which shall not, at the same time, be applicable to all other nations."

That the bearing of those particular Articles on the question now under consideration seemed especially important, inasmuch as their stipulations had formed the subject of actual discussion in relation to it, although such discussion had been followed as yet by no tangible or practical result.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was also to direct our attention to the two Foreign Office Memoranda of the 19th May, 1879, and the 31st May, 1880, respectively; and with respect to the latter Memorandum (which was prepared by Mr. C. M. Kennedy, the Head of the Commercial Department of the Foreign Office, who was one of the British Delegates to the Conference now sitting) he was to ask us to be good enough to inform your Lordship whether we agreed with the meaning attributed to the phrase "under like circumstances" on p. 6, and to the phrase "like goods" on p. 7 thereof.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship, at our early convenience, with our opinion on the question submitted in that letter, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the matter.

We were also honoured with a further letter from Sir Julian Pauncefote, dated the 8th December, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 3rd instant, he was directed to inform us that your Lordship had learnt from Baron Henry de Worms that the question which was referred to in that letter would probably be brought before the Conference on Sugar Bounties at its meeting on the 12th instant. That it would, therefore, be a matter of considerable importance that your Lordship should be able to instruct the British Delegates as to the precise position which they could properly take on the points involved—as the negotiations in which Her Majesty's Government were engaged would be placed in a position of much embarrassment in the absence of such definite instructions.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was accordingly to request that we would be so good as to take into our earliest consideration the papers referred to us in his abovementioned letter, and that we would report, as soon as we could conveniently do so, on the points therein raised.

Proposed enactment.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was further directed to state that there was another point which might, with advantage, be considered in connection with the questions now before us, namely, whether Her Majesty's Government were precluded by the most-favoured-nation clauses in the Commercial Treaties, which had been referred to us, from declaring by a legislative enactment—general in its terms and applicable alike to all notions—that foreign sugar should only be allowed to be imported into the United Kingdom under the conditions (or such modifications, if any, of their terms as we might suggest) set forth in the form which accompanied Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we have considered the papers (A), (B), (C), and (D) submitted to us, containing the drafts which may be proposed for acceptance by the Conference, and also the various Treaties mentioned in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter.

(C) inconsistent with m.-f.-n. clauses.

In our opinion, as long as Treaties remain in force containing clauses such as those to which our attention has been particularly called, namely, Russia, 12th January, 1859 (Articles II, III, and X), and Austria, 5th December, 1876, Italy, 15th June, 1883 (Articles II and XI), and some other of the Treaties to which our attention is called, and which contain similar clauses, Draft (C) would be inconsistent with the obligations of such Treaties. Drafts (A), (B), and (D), though not inconsistent, as they only provide for "liberty to come to an understanding," "liberty to impose a surtax," and "liberty to prohibit," could not produce any practical result as long as such Treaties remain in force.

No objection to (B) and (D) if Powers will consent.

If the Powers represented at the Conference are prepared to consent to the obligations embodied in the drafts (B) and (D), and to agree to the necessary variation of their respective Treaties or Conventions to the extent therein provided, we see no objection to the Representatives of this country being authorized to agree thereto, subject to the formal assent of the respective Powers.

Proposed legislation inconsistent with Treaties.

As long as the Treaties to which we have referred remain in force, Her Majesty's Government would not be justified in consenting to such a legislative provision as that suggested in the draft inclosed in the letter of Sir Julian Pauncefote of the 8th December, 1887.

Explanation of terms.

In our opinion the words "under like circumstances" refer to circumstances connected with exportation or importation, and "like goods" refer to the quality, nature, and description of the article. Neither expression has, we think, any reference to the conditions of manufacture.

Grant of bounties an argument for terminating m.-f.-n. Treaties.

While expressing the views hereinbefore contained, we think it right to add that, although, as long as the Treaties to which we have referred are binding, it is not open to this country to impose retaliatory duties on goods bountied by countries with which those Treaties are in force, such bounties may produce an effect so clearly contrary to the object of the most-favoured-nation clauses that the grant of bounties gives to Her Majesty's Government the strongest argument for putting an end to such Treaties in cases in which it is considered desirable so to do.

We have, &c.

Article V of Austrian Treaty consistent with prohibition of bountied goods.

P.S.—I desire to add that, in my opinion, if Article V of the Treaty with Austria of the 5th December, 1876, stood alone, this country would be entitled to prohibit the importation of articles on which bounties are given.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received January 18.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, January 17, 1887.

Administration of oaths by Consuls. Proposed Anglo-German Convention.

WE were honoured with the commands of your Lordship's predecessor signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 18th ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list with reference to the subject of a proposed Convention between the German Empire and Great Britain respecting the competence of the respective Consuls of either Contracting Party to administer oaths within the dominions of the other.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to inclose a draft of a despatch which it was proposed to address to Sir E. Malet, Her Majesty's Ambassador at the Court of Berlin, for communication to the German Imperial Government, but that Sir Julian Pauncefote was to add that the Secretary of State would first be glad to be favoured with our opinion as to whether the instructions therein contained were such as might properly be sent to Sir Edward Malet in the circumstances.

That it would be seen that the substitution which it was considered desirable to make of the words "for the purpose of transactions pending or to be conducted" for the words "in cases which are to be determined," which occurred in Article 1 of the draft proposed to Germany, was based upon the terms of the Report of the then Law Officers of the Crown, dated the 6th May, 1884.

That the Secretary of State would further be glad to know whether we considered that the words which it was proposed to substitute would include evidence required for the purpose of suits pending before Courts of Law.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted therewith into our consideration, and that we would favour the Secretary of State with our opinion on the questions submitted in his letter, and with any general observations which we might also desire to offer as bearing upon the subject.

In obedience to the commands of the Secretary of State we have the honour to report—

Disapprove proposed instructions to Sir E. Malet.

That, in our opinion, the proposed instructions are not such as should be sent to Sir E. Malet.

The concluding words of section 13 of 5 & 6 Wm. IV, cap. 62, do not create any power to administer an oath; those words only exempt from the prohibition of the section "any oath, affidavit, or affirmation which may be required by the laws of any foreign country to give validity to instruments in writing designed to be used in such foreign countries respectively."

No legal authority for Consuls in England to administer oaths.

We are of opinion that in England, as in Germany, there is no legal authority for the Consuls of foreign States to administer oaths; and, whatever may be the case with regard to Germany, an Act of Parliament would be required to give such authority to foreign Consuls here.

Treaty nugatory without Act.

It may be advisable to pass an Act enabling Her Majesty in Council to give such privilege to the Consuls of countries in which a similar power is given to our Consular Representatives; but we think there would be little advantage, if any, in making a Treaty with Germany, which, until such legislation were passed, would be entirely nugatory, so far at least as this country is concerned.

Disapprove counter-draft of Article I.

We need only add that, in our opinion, the phrase in Article I, "in cases which are to be determined," is preferable to that suggested in the counter-draft.

Draft of Despatch to Sir E. Malet.

(No. . Treaty.)

Sir,
Foreign Office, December , 1886.

HER Majesty's Government have had under their consideration the draft Convention respecting the administration of oaths by Consuls of the one party in the territory of the other, which was inclosed in your Excellency's despatch No. 4, Consular, of the 6th March last.

The subject, as you are aware, is not free from difficulty in this country, and in view of the conditions of existing British law, Her Majesty's Government have felt themselves obliged to suggest certain amendments in the proposed text, as will be seen from the inclosed counter-draft.

They are advised that the terms of the existing Act 5 & 6 Wm. IV, cap. 62, sec. 13 (of which I inclose a copy for communication to the German Government), empowers a foreign Consul to administer oaths to a person of any nationality in the United Kingdom for the purpose of transactions pending, or to be conducted, in the country such Consul represents.

The first paragraph of Article I of the German draft can therefore be accepted with the slight verbal amendment shown in the British counter-draft, which is designed to bring it, without question, within the terms of the above-mentioned Act.

In regard to the second paragraph of Article I, which imposes the penalty of perjury in respect of oaths so taken, it should be explained that no British law at present exists sufficient to carry this provision into effect; but in view of the real importance attaching to this point, Her Majesty's Government would be prepared to sign the Convention in these terms, on the distinct understanding that the second paragraph of Article I shall not come into effect until the necessary legislation has been passed in this country.

In regard to Article II, difficulties exist in some British Colonies as to the necessity of special legislation in such matters, and Her Majesty's Government, therefore, feel themselves compelled to propose an alternative Article providing for the adhesion of any Colonies if or when they are in a position to give legal effect to the Convention, and are prepared to accept its terms.

I have to request that your Excellency will submit these observations to the German Government, adding, that if the modifications now proposed in the German draft are accepted, you will receive authority to sign the Convention forthwith on the understanding as to the second paragraph of Article I mentioned in this despatch.

I am, &c.

Marriages at Embassies and Legations.

That it was conceived that the particular Act in question (a copy of which was inclosed), being confined in its terms to England and Wales, could have no application to marriages celebrated beyond those limits, and that the various previous English Marriages Acts did not extend beyond this country (see Dr. Tristram's letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury of the 9th February, 1877);* and that it was stated in the Report of the Royal Commission on the Laws of Marriage† (1868, p. 4: "Marriages of British Subjects in Foreign Countries"), that a marriage of a British subject solemnized in the hotel of an Ambassador, "according to the law of England as it existed before Lord Hardwicke's Act,‡ has always been upheld by English Courts as a valid marriage."

That your Lordship would therefore propose to inform Mr. Jocelyn that it was not necessary to the validity of marriages celebrated at the British Legation that they should have been solemnized between the hours prescribed by English Statute Law; but that, before doing so, your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion as to whether that view was correct or not, and also with any further observations which we might be good enough to add upon the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Not necessary to celebrate them within the hours prescribed by Statutes.

That, in our opinion, it is not necessary to the validity of marriages celebrated at the British Legation that they should have been solemnized between the hours prescribed by English Statutes in respect of marriages solemnized in England.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received June 30.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, June 29, 1887.

German claim to jurisdiction over foreigners in Protectorates.

WE were honoured with the commands of the Secretary of State signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 18th December last, stating that he was directed by the Earl of Iddesleigh to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the legal position of the German Protectorates in South and West Africa, the South Seas, and elsewhere, a question which had lately formed the subject of discussion between the Imperial German Government and that of Her Majesty.

Character of Protectorate proclaimed.

That we should observe from Count Hatzfeldt's note verbale of the 29th August of last year that a Protectorate proclaimed in the name of His Majesty the Emperor of Germany was not in its terms limited to the persons residing or sojourning in the protected territory, but extended to the district itself, and accordingly had a territorial character.

That all persons, moreover, being within such a Protectorate were, irrespectively of their nationality, subject to German jurisdiction, side by side with which the jurisdiction of any other State could not be exercised.

Ground of claim.

That in the opinion of the Imperial German Government the right of exercising jurisdiction in the Protectorates was based upon the fact that the protected territories were placed under the German suzerainty, and the exercise of supreme justice was not dependent upon the territories being declared parts of the German Empire, nor was the German supreme jurisdiction derived from the native Chiefs existing in the Protectorates.

That at the same time, on grounds of expediency, jurisdiction over the natives had, in some cases, been left by Treaty in the hands of their Chiefs.

Consequent rights of the Reichstag.

That the practical convenience of the view to which legislative sanction, as far as Germany was concerned, had been given by the German Imperial Law of the 17th April, 1886, that a country which submitted to German protection, or to which, being an uncivilized place, German protection was extended without any submission, became ipso facto subject to the Reichstag, and to the laws made by that body, was evident; and that the Secretary of State would be glad to be favoured with our opinion as to whether or not the British Parliament also possessed, in analogous circumstances, a similar power to legislate for countries placed under British protection.

Does Parliament possess similar rights?

Difference between German view and that of former Law Officers.

That the view taken by the German Imperial Government that all persons within a German Protectorate were, irrespective of nationality, subject to German jurisdiction, indicated a conception of the rights and powers assumed by the establishment of a Protectorate which seemed to differ from that taken by the former Law Officers of the Crown, in advising Her Majesty's Government with reference to the extent of the jurisdiction exercisable by Her Majesty over the subjects of foreign civilized nations within British Protectorates.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was specially to call our attention, as bearing upon the subject, to the various opinions of past Law Officers of the Crown which were sent therewith, and in which it would be observed that questions relating to the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts, which did not arise on the present reference, were to some extent also involved; and that he was to request our opinion as to whether the views expressed by the German Imperial Government might be accepted in their entirety; and if not, in what respects, and to what extent, we considered that they were open to objection.

That while requesting that we would take the papers transmitted therewith into our consideration, and that we would favour the Secretary of State with our opinion on the questions submitted in his letter, Sir Julian Pauncefote was also to ask that we would be good enough to add any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to the commands of the Secretary of State we have the honour to report—

That, having regard to the great importance of the questions raised in the papers to which our attention has been called, we have thought it right to delay our answer to those questions until we were in a position to submit to Her Majesty's Government a complete Memorandum upon the subject.

The particular form of Protectorate with regard to which our opinion is now asked is somewhat new to international relations, and no discussion of any such form of government can be found in the earlier writers upon international law. But the main principles which must be regarded are, in our opinion, well settled; one of these is that the right of jurisdiction over the persons found in any territory belongs only to the Power which is entitled to rights of territorial sovereignty. Those rights may be acquired by conquest, by cession, or by settlement, and where they exist, the Power which possesses them is clearly entitled to exercise jurisdiction over all persons coming within the limits of the territory, whether they be natives of such territory, or the subjects (other than Diplomatic Representatives) of a foreign Power.

Jurisdiction over foreigners exists only where there are rights of territorial sovereignty.

But no Power has any right, according to international law, to exercise jurisdiction over the subjects of another Power, unless they are residing within its own territorial limits.

Municipal laws do not affect international law.

The municipal laws of any country cannot affect or enlarge its rights under international law, and it is not material, therefore, to refer, in a discussion of this question, either to the terms of the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts of this country, or to the provisions of the German Imperial Decrees.

The English Acts show that it is doubtful whether, but for the authority given by them, Her Majesty would have any effective jurisdiction even over her own subjects in foreign countries, and it is clear that no provision in those Acts could operate to subject to English law any subject of a foreign State. The proposition now contended for by the German Imperial Government is that it is competent to that Government to establish what may be properly called a Consular Protectorate in a foreign country, that is to say, a Protectorate in virtue of which the German Government does not claim the rights, or accept the liabilities, of territorial sovereignty. And it is claimed that, upon the establishment of that Consular Protectorate, the subjects of all other Germans claim power to establish a Consular Protectorate with jurisdiction over foreigners.

Powers become amenable to the jurisdiction of the officer appointed to administer such Protectorate, and to the Tribunal of the Protectorate by which the Consular Court is replaced.

It is curious to note, in regard to this claim, the opinion given by Dr. Krauel to the German Government, and confidentially communicated to Mr. Scott (Memorandum, 10th March, 1886) that, "in those islands and places to be assigned to German influence by the declaration of demarcation, but not yet notified as placed under the German flag, Her Majesty's High Commissioner could certainly continue to exercise civil and criminal jurisdiction over British subjects, but that it would be almost impossible to permit this in regard to places where German sovereignty or Protectorates had already been established, as it would be a clear infringement of the rights of territorial sovereignty." It will be observed that the claim to exercise an exclusive jurisdiction is put upon the ground which we conceive to be right in law, but which does not exist in the case of the Protectorate in question.

Claim not justified. Concur in opinions of former Law Officers.

We are of opinion that the claim above stated is not justified by the accepted principles of international law. Substantially the same question has been on four occasions considered by our predecessors in office. In August 1880 the Attorney- and Solicitor-General expressed their opinion that Her Majesty could by Treaty with a native Chief obtain jurisdiction within his territories over subjects of foreign civilized States resident within such territories, but the exercise of any such jurisdiction might be made the ground of diplomatic objection by the civilized State to whose subject it was extended, and it should not, as a rule, be exercised without the concurrence of that State given generally or in the particular case.

Again, in December 1884, the same Law Officers advised that legal jurisdiction over persons other than British subjects could not, under the circumstances (there being no native Power capable of ceding to the Queen jurisdiction over the natives, or, in fact, over any one), be acquired within the protected area in question unless it became British soil. In August 1885 the then Attorney- and Solicitor-General (Sir Richard Webster and Sir John Gorst) used the following words: "That, in our opinion, neither the native African Chiefs nor any of the bodies of freebooters settled in Bechuanaland could, either by Treaty or sufferance, confer upon Her Majesty jurisdiction over the subjects of any civilized Power other than Great Britain." . . . "The effect of the duly promulgated Order in Council of the 27th January, 1885, is to enable the High Commissioner to constitute Tribunals in Bechuanaland having jurisdiction over British subjects and protected natives, but not over the subjects of other civilized States." . . . "The Bestuur, or any other establishments in Stellaland which Sir Charles Warren has created or sanctioned, so far as they are consistent with the Order in Council, may be regarded as the particular methods by which he has thought fit to exercise his jurisdiction over British subjects and protected natives in Stellaland. In this sense, but in no other, they have a legal status. The subjects of the other civilized States who are in Stellaland cannot be interfered with by the Bestuur, or any Tribunals that may be instituted under its authority, without the consent of their own Governments."

And, finally, in April 1886, other Law Officers (Sir Charles Russell and Sir Horace Davey) expressed their opinion that "as against the Chiefs (assuming that they have sovereign territorial authority, and do not merely exercise tribal personal authority as Chiefs) Her Majesty can lawfully acquire by Treaty with them the right to exercise civil and criminal jurisdiction over subjects of civilized Powers other than Great Britain within the territories of the Chiefs; but as against the subjects of other civilized Powers, we think that the jurisdiction (whatever may be its theoretical limits) should be exercised with, and cannot safely be exercised without, the assent of the Power concerned, given generally or in the particular case."

Should refuse to admit German claim to jurisdiction over British subjects in a Consular Protectorate.

We entirely concur in the advice which has been given to Her Majesty's Government by our predecessors in office for the guidance in its action in reference to territories over which this Government exercises a Protectorate, and we are of opinion that the German Government should be notified that the claim to exclusive jurisdiction over British subjects in territories with respect to which it only exercises a Consular Protectorate is not one which Her Majesty's Government can admit.

Legal Opinion by Dr. Hirsch, inclosed in Mr. Scott's No. 22, Treaty, of July 14, 1887.

Goods bearing English trade-marks counterfeited in Europe, consigned to a German subject in Siam.

THE case, as submitted by the English Embassy to the undersigned barrister, for his opinion, is as follows:—

The trade-marks of an English subject, which have been registered in England, have been counterfeited in Europe, and goods provided with these counterfeit marks have been introduced into Siam for the purpose of sale.

The goods so introduced were consigned to a German subject in Bangkok.

The questions put are:—

1. What steps can be taken by the aggrieved English manufacturer in order to get his losses made good?

2. Can a claim be brought before the Consular Court in Siam, and what are the provisions of German law under which proceedings can be instituted?

3. Whether in this case appeal can be made from the decision of the Consular Court at Siam, and to what Tribunal?

Steps to be taken by the English manufacturer to obtain redress.

German law respecting protection of trade-marks.

In reply to No. 1, the Law respecting the protection of trade-marks of the 30th November, 1874, lays down in section 20: "The present Law applies to trade-marks of traders who have no trade establishment in Germany. And also to the names or firms of foreign producers or traders, provided that, according to a notice inserted in the Imperial Gazette, German trade-marks, names, and firms are protected in the State where the foreigners in question have their trade establishment, but, in regard to the trade-mark, subject to the following conditions:—

1. The trade-mark must be entered at the Commercial Court at Leipzig, with a certificate that the person entering it submits to the jurisdiction of the said Court in all actions founded upon this Law.

2. The entry must be accompanied by a proof that the enterer has fulfilled the conditions necessary to entitle him to protection in his own country for his trade-mark.

3. This registration gives a legal right of ownership in the trade-mark only in so far, and as long, as the person entering it is protected in the use of the mark in question in the foreign State.

By the declaration of Article VI of the Treaty of Commerce between the Zollverein and Great Britain of the 30th May, 1865, and the 14th April, 1875 ("Reichsgesetz Blatt" of 1875, p. 199), a system of reciprocal protection, in the meaning of No. 2, has been introduced, and applies to the whole territory of the German Empire.

By the Law respecting Consular jurisdiction of the 10th July, 1879 ("Reichsgesetz Blatt," 1879, p. 197, &c.), it is laid down (Par. I) that Consular jurisdiction is to be exercised in those countries in which it is permitted by tradition or Treaty, and that the subjects of the Empire, both native and protected, settled or residing in those Consular districts, are subjected to such jurisdiction.

There is at Bangkok a German Consulate for the Kingdom of Siam (vide p. 54 "Reichsgesetz Blatt," 1872).

According to section 3 of the Consular Jurisdiction Law in regard to civil law, it is to be assumed that in the Consular districts of jurisdiction the Imperial laws, the Prussian general law, and the general laws of those Prussian territories in which the general law has legal force, having reference to civil law, are in force.

In commercial matters, the law immediately applicable is the law of commercial usage in force in the Consular jurisdiction district.

It depends accordingly on whether a law of commercial usage relating to the protection of trade has been instituted for the Kingdom of Siam. This must be proved by the manufacturer. If this is not the case, the provisions of the Imperial Law of the 30th November, 1874, relating to protection of trade-marks, would come into application. The protection of the English manufacturer depends, therefore, on whether he has registered the trade-mark at the Commercial Court at Leipzig, in accordance with the above-mentioned section 20, No. 1. If this is not the case, then the use of the trade-mark by Germans is not forbidden, and, therefore, cannot be protected by the German Consul in favour of the English manufacturer. But if the proper registration has taken place at the Commercial Court at Leipzig, then section 13 of the Law relating to protection of trade-marks is applicable, according to which every German producer or trader (and, according to section 20, also foreign traders) can proceed against the person who designates, illegally, goods or their packing with a trade-mark which, according to this Law, is to be protected for the former, or with the name or the firm, and demand that he be declared not entitled by law to use this mark. Likewise, the producer or trader can proceed against the person who brings into the market or sells goods thus illegally designated, and demand that he be declared not entitled by law to bring goods thus designated into the market, or sell them; and section 14 of the same enacts: "Whoever, knowingly, illegally designates goods or their packing with a trade-mark which is to be protected according to this Law, or with the name, or with the firm of an inland (or, as in the present case, of a foreign) producer or trader, or whoever knowingly brings into the market or sells goods thus illegally designated, will be punished by a fine of 150 to 3,000 marks, or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, and will be bound to compensate the party injured."

Prosecution can only be initiated by suit. Further, the following paragraphs of the Law concerning protection of trade-marks must be taken into consideration.

Section 15. Instead of any compensation founded on this Law the person injured can demand that, in addition to the punishment, a fine also may be paid to him, not exceeding 5,000 marks. Persons sentenced to such a fine are liable as joint debtors. A fine once adjudged excludes any further claim to compensation.

Section 16. The question whether damage has been sustained and to what amount is settled by the Court, after weighing all the circumstances, and on its own responsibility.

Section 17. If sentence has been pronounced on the ground of section 14, then, with regard to the goods in the possession of the condemned party, if the injured party should demand it, judgment is to be given for the destruction of the marks upon the packing or the goods, or if the removal of the marks be otherwise impossible, for the destruction of the packing or of the goods themselves.

If a sentence is given in penal procedure, the injured party is entitled to publish openly the sentence at the expense of the person sentenced. The manner of publication, as also the limit of time, is to be determined in the sentence.

The injured party accordingly is free to proceed in the Consular Court against the party to whom the goods in question were consigned, if it can be proved that the latter knew that the goods were illegally marked, and that he brought them into the market and sold them, and demand—

(1.) That the same be punished, and that the sentence be published.

(2.) That he pay the compensation to be fixed according to section 16, or, instead of this, that he pay a fine not exceeding 5,000 marks. If a fine is demanded, no further compensation can be demanded.

(3.) That the marks on the goods introduced be destroyed.

Course of procedure before German Consular Courts.

2. In regard to the procedure, this is regulated, if compensation is claimed, by the Consular Court, in accordance with the provisions of the law of civil procedure for cases before the Amtsgericht (section 15 of the Law on Consular Jurisdiction of the 10th July, 1879), that is to say, the complaint can be handed into the Consul in writing, or entered as a Protocol. An attorney's services are not required. The parties, however, can be represented by any persons competent to conduct an action ("processfähig"), that is to say, by a person who can bind himself by contract. The Representative must produce and hand in a written power of attorney.

If punishment and also a fine is claimed, a demand to that effect must be handed to the Consul.

Course of procedure in event of appeal.

3. There is no appeal against the decisions of the Consul or Consular Court in civil cases, unless the value of the object in dispute exceeds 300 marks. If the value exceeds that amount the plaintiff, in actions of civil law, conducted before the Consul or Consular Court, can appeal to the Imperial Court ("Reichsgericht") to deal with and decide on the legal remedy. Against the decisions of the Imperial Court ("Reichsgesetz") there is no further legal remedy (section 18, Consular Jurisdiction Law). The notice of appeal must be lodged with the Consul within a month from the service of the sentence. This is to be done by handing in a written appeal. In a penal action the decision can be appealed against (section 34 of the Consular Jurisdiction Law).

The Consular Court decides complaints against the decisions of the Consul (this refers to decisions not sentences) (paragraph 35 of the same).

The Imperial Court ("Reichsgericht") is the competent authority to deal with and to decide on the legal remedy of complaints against decisions of the Consular Court, and also on the legal remedy of appeal.

Against the decisions of the Imperial Court there is no further legal remedy.

The time for lodging the appeal in penal actions is two weeks, and if the sentence has been pronounced in the presence of the defendant, it is to be reckoned from the day of its publication, but if not, from the date on which notice of it was served on him.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received August 30.)

My Lord,

Royal Courts of Justice, August 27, 1887.

Request of Madame Triebel, wife of a German subject, for passports for her sons, born in England, now residing in Germany.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers* with reference to an application which had lately been made to Her Majesty's Consul-General at Hamburgh by a lady named Triebel for the issue of British passports to her two sons, neither of whom was of full age, under the following somewhat exceptional circumstances:

That Mrs. Triebel was a natural-born British subject, but had married a husband of German nationality.

That subsequently to their marriage they resided in the United Kingdom for some years, and that the two sons in question were born in England during that period.

That when the sons were 6 and 5 years old respectively, their father resumed residence at his native place, Bremen, taking his family with him.

That he deserted his wife now some eight years since, but that she had not obtained a divorce from him, and had continued, with her sons, to reside at Bremen up to the present time.

That the father, though resident in England for some time, never became a naturalized British subject, nor had he obtained papers of denationalization from the German Government, and that it would be seen, therefore, that, though the sons were natural-born British subjects, both father and mother had throughout their married life continued to be, and now were, of German nationality.

That in those circumstances, Mrs. Triebel had asked that passports should be issued to her sons with a view, as was presumed by the Consul-General, of enabling them to evade military service in Germany, to which they would otherwise almost immediately become liable.

Wishes of the sons and father not known.

That it did not, however, appear whether the children themselves wished to be regarded as British subjects, nor was it at all clear that their father desired them to be so regarded, and that your Lordship conceived that, until the wishes of the father and of the children themselves were more clearly established, the Consul-General might, in the particular case now under consideration, well hesitate to grant such passports on the unsupported application of the mother alone.

* Consul-General Dundas, No. 3, Treaty, June 16, 1887; Law Officers' Report, November 13, 1886 (Ehrensperger case). (Confidential No. 5440, p. 43.)

But that the further and more general question remained as to whether, even in cases where both parents were foreigners, whose presence in the United Kingdom at the time was of the most temporary and transient kind, the fact of birth on British soil entitled a person becoming a natural-born British subject by virtue thereof, to demand under all circumstances on that sole ground alone, as well from the proper British authorities within his country of origin as from such authorities within the United Kingdom, that a British passport should be issued to him.

Question as to limiting grant of passports;

That Sir T. V. Lister was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether any, and if so what, limits might fairly be placed upon the issue of passports by Her Majesty's Ministers or Consuls abroad to persons claiming them as natural-born British subjects under such circumstances as are indicated above; and especially as to whether any distinction should be observed in the treatment of applications for passports which were made to the British authorities in the applicant's country of origin, and those which were made by such applicants when within some foreign country other than his country of origin.

and as to their wishes, and those of their father.

But that should, in our judgment, the two Messrs. Triebel be persons entitled, after proper demand made, to be furnished with passports, your Lordship would also be obliged if in their particular case we would further inform your Lordship whether we considered the issue of such passports to them might be temporarily suspended pending the receipt by the Consul-General of some more definite information as to their own and their father's wishes on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Persons born on British soil are British subjects without distinction.

That there is no doubt that, by the law of this country, all persons born on British soil are natural-born British subjects, unless the father is an alien enemy. The nationality of the parents is quite immaterial, nor can any question arise as to the length or objects of their stay on British soil. And there is no distinction between different classes of natural-born British subjects; however that character has been obtained, all such subjects are alike in respect of the duty of allegiance and the rights of recognition and protection.

This nationality can only be divested by a declaration of alienage under the Act 33 and 34 Vict., cap. 14, sec. 4, or by voluntary naturalization in a foreign State. Any natural-born British subject, unless he has so divested himself of that character, is entitled to have his nationality recognized and national protection given him by the issue of a passport, in whatever part of the world he may claim it, from the Representative of the Crown.

Should grant the passports asked for.

In this case, if the sons were of full age, we should advise, as in the case of Mr. Ehrensperger, upon which our opinion was taken in November 1886, that passports should be issued to them upon their satisfying the authorities that they had not made a declaration of alienage under the Act quoted, nor voluntarily become naturalized in any foreign State. As they are under age, they could not make a declaration of alienage, nor could they have obtained for themselves the character of naturalized citizens in Germany, although no doubt they are German subjects, as being the sons of a German father, although they were born in Great Britain. The application in this case is made by the mother, and ought, in our opinion, to be granted. The fact that the father does not concur in that application appears to us immaterial.

They are not exempt from their duties as foreigners.

We think it right to add the expression of our opinion that, in cases of double nationality, Her Majesty's Government would not be entitled to assert for persons being or deemed to be natural-born British subjects exemption from their obligations as subjects of a foreign State; and that if the sons of Madame Triebel should use the passport as a ground for contending that they are exempt from the obligations of military service in Germany, that contention ought not to be supported by Her Majesty's Government.

No. 36.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Sir J. Deane to the Earl of Iddesleigh.—(Received January 1.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, January 1, 1887.

Claim of Mrs. Allen for losses sustained during an insurrection.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 30th November, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us the paper* relating to the claim of Mrs. Allen, a coloured British subject, domiciled in Haïti, against the Government of that island, in respect of pillage and destruction done (as was alleged), wantonly and without military necessity, to her house and goods at Coraïl in 1883 by the Government troops whilst they were engaged in suppressing an insurrection in the neighbourhood.

That similar claims for compensation in respect of injury to property committed under analogous circumstances during the suppression of the riots at Port-au-Prince had been in several instances put forward by Haïtain subjects, and that it was also believed by subjects of foreign nations other than Great Britain, but that the Haïtian Government had in every case, as far as was known, refused to entertain them, and that they now maintained that Mrs. Allen had, in the circumstances mentioned, no greater title to compensation at their hands than a Haïtian subject would have in the like event.

That it was conceived, however, that, although the general principle governing such cases undoubtedly was that foreign subjects suffering from the results of an insurrection had no greater claim to compensation than the natives of the country in which the insurrection occurred, yet, if the injury resulted from acts of private plunder or wanton and unnecessary destruction of property not justified by military necessity, and encouraged by lax and inefficient discipline, a neutral Government might have a special claim to compensation on behalf of its subjects; and that Sir J. Pauncefote was specially to bring to our attention, as bearing particularly upon that point, the accompanying Foreign Office Memorandum* of the 23rd October, 1883, the views put forward in which had the general approval of the then Law Officers of the Crown.

That Sir J. Pauncefote was to mention that Mrs. Allen did not put forward any claim for compensation in respect of the alleged damage done to her house and goods (the amount of which she now assessed at 15,000 dollars) until a period of rather more than two years had elapsed from the date of the occurrence of which she complained.

That in explanation of this long delay she, however, pointed out that there was at the time the damage was inflicted nobody but herself to look after her affairs, which had been thrown into a deplorable state, and that she was obliged to put the safety of her three children, whose lives were in danger, before every other consideration.

That she was afterwards, moreover, for eight months continually ill with ague and unable to make the necessary preparations for a journey. That she also pointed out that she lived very far from the capital town of Haïti, that it was difficult to know what was passing there, and that, if it be a fact that the Government had called on all claimants to present their claims, every one was aware of the fact.

That she did not, however, say, in so many words, that she brought forward her claim at the earliest moment possible to her, nor had she at present explained, further than was above stated, the long delay which undoubtedly took place before it was presented.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote requested that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether Mrs. Allen's claim, if sustained by reasonable primâ facie evidence, should, notwithstanding her delay in bringing it forward, receive the support of Her Majesty's Government on the grounds indicated above or on any others, and also with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

* Memorandum dated October 20, 1883 (Confidential No. 5015).

1887

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Hostile invasion.

That the Memorandum of the Foreign Office of October 1883 does not apply to the present case, as it deals only with the case of a hostile invasion, and the rights of subjects of a neutral State resident in a country during such invasion.

Insurrection.

In the case of an insurrection, where the subjects of a neutral State are wantonly injured through the misconduct of the officers or soldiers of the State, the Government of such neutral State is in some cases entitled to intervene and claim compensation. It is not sufficient that a primâ facie case should be made, but very clear and strong evidence should be required by the Government invited so to intervene.

Claim cannot be supported.

In the present case, having regard to the long delay in making the claim, which will render it difficult for the Haïtian Government to ascertain and establish the exact facts of the case, we do not advise that Mrs. Allen's claim should receive the support of Her Majesty's Government.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received February 15.)

Imprisonment of Mr. Coles for fraud on National Bank of Haïti.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, February 15, 1887.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to recall to our recollection that that case, which had been already before us, was in the first instance considered by the late Law Officers of the Crown and by Sir James Deane, Q.C., who reported on the 28th April last year that the irregularities which had been pointed out in connection with Mr. Coles' trial were such as to justify Her Majesty's Government in demanding his release; but that when at a later stage of the case the further question as to whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified in demanding compensation for Mr. Coles was referred to us by direction of the then Secretary of State, we were of opinion that, in view of all the circumstances, Her Majesty's Government would not be justified in demanding such compensation.

That Mr. Coles was accordingly informed that Lord Iddesleigh regretted to be unable, as at that time advised, to interfere further in his behalf, whereupon a correspondence, to which Sir Julian Pauncefote was to direct our more particular attention, took place between the Foreign Office on the one hand, and Mr. Coles and Messrs. King and Hammond (his solicitors) on the other.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted therewith into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to—

1. Whether the terms of the two despatches already sent on the 11th January in reply to Mr. Coles' letter of the 22nd November, 1886, and to Messrs. King and Hammond's letter of the 29th December, 1886, respectively, were such as, in our opinion, were right and proper, and
2. Whether any (and if so what) grounds other than those already pointed out to them in the despatch of the 11th January might, in reply to their letter of the 19th January, with advantage be stated to Messrs. King and Hammond, as comprised within those special circumstances under which Her Majesty's Government were of opinion that the case was not one in which they would be justified in claiming compensation for Mr. Coles.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we approve the despatches sent on the 11th January, and that we do not think it necessary or advisable that any further statement should be made to Mr. Coles of the grounds upon which his application has been refused.

Approve previous despatches. Further statement of grounds of refusal to interfere not advisable.

No. 38.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, January 24, 1887.

Riot in Island of Bonacca.

Claims arising out of.

WE were honoured with the commands of your Lordship's predecessor signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to the claims of British subjects against the Government of Honduras, arising out of a riot in the Island of Bonacca, one of the Bay Islands, which were ceded to Honduras by Great Britain under a Convention dated the 28th November, 1859,* of which a copy was inclosed.

That questions having arisen in some of the despatches from Her Majesty's Representative accredited to the Republic of Honduras as to the status of certain residents in the Bay Islands of British origin, the Earl of Iddesleigh addressed to Mr. Gastrell the instructions of the 4th instant (No. 1), which we should find amongst the accompanying papers.

Conditions of cession of Bay Islands by Great Britain.

That in these instructions it was remarked that under the Convention of 1859 the Bay Islands had been ceded to Honduras, subject to certain conditions, one of which was that if any of the inhabitants should wish to withdraw from the islands, they should be at full liberty to do so, to dispose of their fixed or other property as they might think fit, and to take with them the proceeds thereof; and that a further condition was that the inhabitants should not be disturbed in the enjoyment of any property which they might have acquired thereon, and should retain perfect freedom of religious belief and worship, public and private, but remaining in all other respects subject to the laws of the Republic.

Their effect on nationality and rights of the inhabitants.

That Lord Iddesleigh pointed out to Mr. Gastrell that it was clear from the conditions recited that the allegiance of those inhabitants who did not within a reasonable period avail themselves of the permission to sell their property and withdraw from the islands passed to the Republic of Honduras, and that neither they nor their descendants could claim to be British subjects; but that that fact did not affect the right of Her Majesty's Government to require that they should remain in the free enjoyment of their property and the exercise of their religion; and that any infringement of those privileges by the authorities of Honduras would form a proper subject of remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Representative accredited to the Republic.

* Treaty No. 439.

Position of British subjects.

That Mr. Gastrell was further instructed that the position of British subjects generally, whether resorting to or resident in the Bay Islands or other parts of Honduras, was in no way affected by the Convention of 1859, and that they were to continue to receive from him the protection to which they were justly entitled.

That the facts attending the riot at Bonacca, as far as they could be gathered from Mr. Gastrell's despatch, inclosed (No. 72 of the 15th July, 1886), were as follows:—

Account of riot.

That some Honduranian soldiers who had been paid off, and were intoxicated, began disputing on a cay belonging to a Mr. Kirkconnell; that his wife warned them off, was insulted by them, and eventually knocked off the cay into the sea by a soldier named Medina. That the Commandante, who was owner of the grog-shop on the cay, and was appealed to by Mrs. Kirkconnell, was powerless to interfere, owing to age and inefficiency. That several persons resident in an adjacent cay, and claiming to be British subjects, came to her assistance, amongst them being Mr. Coe Wood (a native of Grand Cayman, one of the dependencies of Jamaica), and Bonner, a coloured man, describing himself as a British subject.

That the riot became general, and that Mr. Coe Wood, who had a revolver in his hand, was attacked by a soldier named Mangina, armed with a machete, or wood-knife. That Mr. Wood, having ineffectually warned him to stand aside, shot him, it was stated, in self-defence, wounding him in the chest; whereupon another soldier, Pedro Ramos by name, who appeared to have been the leader in the riot, cut Wood down, and would have killed him had not Bonner picked up Wood's revolver and shot Ramos dead in defence of Wood.

That the attacking party consisted of from thirty-five to fifty Honduranian soldiers and labourers armed with knives. That the party attacked, numbering nine, armed with one revolver, managed to escape to a neighbouring cay, and thence to an American schooner. That the Honduranians then proceeded to pillage and destroy the property of the persons who now asked for the support of Her Majesty's Government.

Proceedings of authorities.

That the authorities of the neighbouring Island of Ruatran, on learning of the disturbances, acted with promptitude. That they arrested nine Honduranians and Wood and Bonner, and that they restored such of the pillaged property as was recoverable. That three of the Honduranians were sentenced respectively to terms of eight years', four months', and one day's imprisonment. That Wood was imprisoned for fourteen days, and was then released on entering into recognizances, and had since left the island for Grand Cayman. That Bonner was acquitted by the Judge of First Instance, but had been kept in custody ever since (between two and three years) on the plea that his acquittal had not been confirmed by the Supreme Court at Tegucigalpa, to which it was intimated that an appeal might be made; but that no steps had as yet been taken by any one with that view.

That under the circumstances above recited, and which were described in the accompanying papers, the Earl of Iddesleigh presumed that Her Majesty's Government would be justified in demanding from the Government of Honduras the immediate release of Bonner, assuming him to be a British subject, and compensation to him for his long detention in prison without trial; but that the Secretary of State would be glad to be favoured with our opinion with regard to the cases of the other claimants.

Firstly, whether Mr. Coe Wood and any other persons establishing their British nationality were entitled to compensation from the Government of Honduras for damage to their property during the riots.

Secondly, whether Mr. Coe Wood's claim for compensation on account of imprisonment and loss of time should be supported, having regard to the part he took in the riot, and the fact that after fourteen days' imprisonment he was released on his own recognizances and escaped to Grand Cayman.

Thirdly, whether persons who, being the holders of property in the Bay Islands, acquired before the date of the Convention of 1859, or their descendants, who had under its terms become citizens of Honduras, were entitled to the support of Her Majesty's Government in cases of injury to their property, and, if so, to what extent.

That we should observe that some of the claimants whose losses were scheduled in Inclosure 8 of Mr. Gastrell's despatch, were also signatories of the Petition (Inclosure 11) in which they described themselves as "British subjects of the Island of Bonacca, holding grants under British Crown," but who could not now be considered, under the Convention with Honduras, to have claim to British nationality.

In obedience to the commands of the Secretary of State we have the honour to report—

Extent of British support to which holders of property, acquired before 1859, are entitled.

That persons who, being the holders of property in the Bay Islands, acquired before the date of the Convention of 1859, or their descendants, who have under its terms become citizens of Honduras, are entitled to the support of Her Majesty's Government against any violation by the Government of Honduras of the rights reserved to them by the Convention of 1859, but are not entitled to that support for claims in respect of injury for which the Government of Honduras is not responsible.

Claims of Mr. Coe Wood and others not entitled to support.

We are of opinion that Mr. Coe Wood and the other persons mentioned in the questions are not entitled to the support of Her Majesty's Government for their claims in respect of damage done during the riot mentioned, nor is Mr. Coe Wood entitled to that support for his claim for compensation for imprisonment and loss of time.

Should merely apply for Bonner's release.

With regard to Bonner, we would advise, in his interests, that an application should be made simply for his release, on the ground that he was acquitted by the Judge of First Instance, and that no appeal was brought from that decision within a reasonable period.

We have, &c.

My Lord,

Passage of "Duke of Sutherland" through the Suez Canal with Cossacks for Abyssinia.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 26th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying telegrams, (A), (B), and (C), with reference to certain suspicious proceedings on the part of the British steamer "Duke of Sutherland," which were urgently brought to your Lordship's notice by the Italian Chargé d'Affaires at this Court on the 24th instant.

That, after consultation with the India Office, the telegram (A) was forthwith dispatched to Her Majesty's Resident at Aden, from whom, late on the evening of the 25th, the telegram (B) was received in reply.

That, as it appeared necessary from the terms of the latter document to furnish the Resident with some immediate instructions for his guidance, the telegram (C) was, after further consultation with the Foreign Office, dispatched to him by the Secretary of State for India on Saturday afternoon.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the instructions embodied in the telegram (C) were such as, in the circumstances, were right and proper to be dispatched to Her Majesty's Resident, and that we would, at the same time, be good enough to inform your Lordship whether any, and, if so, what supplementary instructions should be forwarded to him on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Approving instructions to Aden.

That we approve the instructions that have been sent, and are not of opinion, upon the facts before us, that any further or more specific directions can be given.

Cannot give opinion as to breach of Foreign Enlistment Act.

Upon the statements now before us we cannot express any opinion whether any breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act has been committed.

Administration of Japanese law by Consular Courts under Article IX of draft Convention.

WE were honoured with the commands of your Lordship's predecessor signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 5th ultimo, stating that he was directed by the Secretary of State to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to negotiations for the revision of Treaties in force between Japan and foreign Powers.

That for some time past negotiations had been in progress for the revision of those Treaties.

That Conferences had been held at Tôkiô, attended, on the one hand, by the Representatives of the foreign Powers in Japan, and, on the other, by Delegates to represent the Japanese Government.

That one of the ultimate objects which the Japanese Government had in view was to secure for Japan complete judicial autonomy, after a probationary period of seventeen years, during which a large proportion of European Judges would be employed, and the entire abandonment by foreign Powers of exterritorial jurisdiction.

That in order to obtain that concession they were prepared to grant to foreigners important privileges in other respects.

That the result of the Conferences had been that a draft Jurisdiction Convention had been framed, which was inclosed in the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Minister in Japan, and which had been accepted by Her Majesty's Government as the basis of negotiations, subject to certain observations which were stated in the instruction to Sir Francis Plunkett of the 2nd October last.

That amongst the observations contained in the latter despatch was one as to Article IX of the draft Convention with regard to a stipulation that Japanese police and administrative laws should be enforced by foreign Consular Courts for the period of three years, during which it was proposed that they should continue to exercise their existing jurisdiction.

That the Secretary of State pointed out in that despatch that British Consular Courts had no power to administer any but British laws, and that they could not therefore be made auxiliary to the new Japanese Courts for the purpose of administering Japanese police law; and that the Secretary of State went on to say that the only mode of meeting that difficulty would be for Her Majesty's Minister to issue Police Regulations identical with the Japanese Police Laws in question.

That, on that point, Sir Julian Pauncefote was to refer us to the Reports of the Law Officers of the Crown of the 22nd September, 1879, the 3rd October, 1879 (Japan), and the 17th December, 1885 (Siam).

That Sir Francis Plunkett had consulted with the Judge of Her Majesty's Court for Japan (Mr. Hannen), who was disposed to think, as we should see stated in Sir Francis Plunkett's despatch No. 192 of the 23rd November, 1886, that inasmuch as, by section 84 of the China and Japan Order in Council of 1865, it was enacted that "if any British subject in China or Japan violates or fails to observe any stipulation of any Treaty between Her Majesty, her heirs or successors, and the Emperor of China, or the Tycoon of Japan, for the time being in force, in respect of the violation whereof any penalty is stipulated for in the Treaty, he shall be deemed guilty of an offence against the Treaty, and on conviction thereof, under this Order, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding the penalty stipulated for in the Treaty," it might be possible to introduce into the proposed Jurisdiction Convention a clause to the effect that "every British subject coming to Japan shall observe the Japanese administrative Laws and Regulations hereinafter enumerated, and if he infringe them shall be liable to the penalty by such administrative Laws and Regulations attached to their infringement."

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take into our consideration the particular point thus raised, and that we would favour the Earl of Iddesleigh with our opinion as to the best means of meeting the difficulty; and that we would also furnish the Secretary of State with any observations that we might have to offer on the draft Convention and the instructions to Her Majesty's Minister of the 2nd October last.

In obedience to the commands of the Secretary of State we have taken the papers into our consideration and have the honour to report—

Her Majesty's Minister should issue Police Regulations identical with Japanese.

That, in our opinion, the best course to be adopted will be for Her Majesty's Minister to issue Police Regulations identical with the Japanese Police Laws in question.

The Order in Council of the 25th October, 1881, clause 13, limits the penalties which can be imposed under such Regulations, and if it is desired to subject British subjects to Police Rules imposing larger penalties, this object could be effected by making an Order in Council repealing, so far as relates to Japan, section 13 of the Order in Council of the 25th October, 1881. This being done, Her Majesty's Minister in Japan may, if he thinks fit, make Regulations imposing the same penalties as those provided by the Japanese Police Regulations. We think this course simpler than by dealing with the matter by Treaty or Convention.

And penalties equal to Japanese should be authorized by new Order in Council.

We, however, advise that the new Order in Council should not be a simple repeal of section 13, but should give authority to Her Majesty's Minister in Japan to make Regulations and to impose penalties not exceeding those to which Japanese subjects are liable.

WE were honoured with the commands of your Lordship's predecessor signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin* relative to the terms of an Order in Council applying certain parts of "The Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881," to Madagascar.

That the Memorandum† inclosed in the letter to Mr. Wright of the 29th November last showed the suggestions made by the Foreign Office in regard to the draft Order in Council prepared by him, which formed Inclosure No. 1 to the same letter; and that the marginal notes to the Memorandum contained Mr. Wright's opinion upon those suggestions.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would inform the Secretary of State whether we approved of the draft Order in Council, with the amendments concurred in by Mr. Wright, or whether we were of opinion that it required any addition or modification.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to add that it was proposed to embody the draft when finally settled in a new Order in Council in course of preparation for the purpose of extending the West African Order in Council to Madagascar.

Appointment of British Consul at Tamatave. His recognition by Hovas direct. French complaint.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list with reference to a complaint which had been made to Her Majesty's Government by that of the French Republic, that Mr. Haggard, who was appointed in January of last year Her Majesty's Consul for Madagascar, to reside at Tamatave, not only neglected, on taking up his appointment to that post, to address himself to the French Minister Resident in Madagascar for the purpose of obtaining through him the usual official recognition accorded to Consuls on appointment by the Government to which they were accredited, but further demanded his exequatur (which had since been furnished to him by them) from the Hova Government direct.

That it was contended by the French Government that that proceeding was a violation of the stipulations of the Franco-Malagasy Treaty of the 17th December, 1885, by which it was provided (Article I) that—

"The Government of the French Republic will represent Madagascar in all its foreign relations;" and (Article II) that "a resident representing the Government of the Republic will preside over the foreign relations of Madagascar without interfering in the internal administration of Her Majesty the Queen" (of that island).

That it was, moreover, asserted by the French Government that, upon that Treaty being communicated to the Earl of Rosebery, Her Majesty's then Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, by the French Ambassador to the Court at St. James', his Lordship did not hesitate to admit that, by the terms of it, France became the necessary intermediary in the relations between the Malagasy and the British Governments.

Disputed interpretation of Treaty.

That that assertion, however, was, as would be seen, founded on an entire misapprehension, for which there was no foundation.

That in consequence of doubts which were expressed by the Malagasy Government as to the interpretation to be placed upon certain phrases in the text of the Treaty of the 17th December, 1885, Admiral Miot, the Rear-Admiral Commanding-in-chief upon the station, and then French Minister Plenipotentiary to Madagascar, addressed, on the 9th January, 1886, an explanatory note to the Malagasy Minister, and that that note seemed to have an important bearing upon, amongst other things, the language of Article II and the character and extent of the powers of interference in the foreign relations between Madagascar and Powers other than France, which were thereby intended to be secured to him.

That upon the subject of that note, however, the French and Hova Governments were at present at issue, the latter maintaining that it formed an integral part of the arrangement under which peace was concluded between themselves and France, while the French Government were contending for the opposite view.

That it might, therefore, be argued that the acceptance of the French contention on that particular point by Her Majesty's Government would amount on their part to a prejudging of a question in dispute between Madagascar and France.

Appointment of previous Consul.

That it might not be unimportant to mention that, upon the last previous occasion when a Consul for Madagascar was appointed by Her Majesty (which occurred however so long ago as 1862), the fullest and most direct recognition of his official position was accorded to him by order of the King, although the usual method of effecting this amongst civilized nations, viz., the grant of an "exequatur," was not then apparently followed.

Anglo-Malagasy Treaty arrangements.

That at that time there were no Treaty engagements with reference to the appointment of Consuls existing between Great Britain and Madagascar, but that three years later, on the 24th June, 1865, the "Treaty of Peace, Friendship, Commerce, and Slave Trade," which was at present in force between the two countries, was ratified. That by Article IV of that Treaty, the Queen of Madagascar engaged to receive a British Agent at her capital, and Her Britannic Majesty in like manner engaged to receive at the Mauritius or in London an Agent of the Queen of Madagascar.

That it was also by the same Article provided that "each Contracting Party may appoint Consuls for the protection of trade to reside in the dominions of the other," and that "such Agents and Consuls shall enjoy in the respective dominions the same rights and privileges which are or may be there granted to Agents of the same rank of the most-favoured-nation."

French assurance as to foreign Treaty rights.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was desired, in connection with those provisions, to call our particular attention to the language of M. de Freycinet's Circular telegram of the 27th December, 1886, communicating the Treaty to the various foreign Powers (see print correspondence respecting Treaty of the 17th December, 1885, No. 2, p. 7), wherein he pointed out that "this Treaty, if ratified by the two Governments, changes nothing in the Treaties already existing between the Hova Government and other States."

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to:—

(1.) Whether, under all the circumstances, the Government of the French Republic was entitled to claim that Her Majesty's Consul should apply for his exequatur from the Hova Government through the French Minister Resident in Madagascar.

(2.) If not, on what grounds could such claim be most advantageously resisted by Her Majesty's Government; and

(3.) With any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

French claim to be channel for obtaining exequatur inconsistent with their assurances.

That, in our opinion, this question, so far as it relates to the rights of Great Britain, is covered by the assurance given by M. de Freycinet on the 27th December, 1885. Prior to that month the two Governments of Great Britain and Madagascar were, under the provisions of the Treaty of 1865, in direct Consular relations one with the other. Any provision in a Treaty made by Madagascar which required that British Consular Agents in that country should obtain authority to act there from the Representative of another Power would have been a serious alteration of the rights and relations between the Governments of Madagascar and Great Britain; and M. de Freycinet offered the assurance, which has been accepted by Great Britain and other Powers, that the new Treaty changed nothing in those already existing between the Hova Government and other States.

Admiral Miot's note justifies French assurances as to foreign Treaties.

In reference to the question now in debate between the Hova Government and that of France it is not necessary to express a final opinion, but, having regard to the terms of the letter of the 9th January, 1886, it seems clear that that letter was intended as, at the least, an official statement of the interpretation put by the French Government upon the provisions of the Treaty, and it appears that this letter was delivered to the Hova Government before the ratification of that Treaty, and probably as an inducement to such ratification. Assuming the contention of the Hova Government upon this point to be correct, the language of the letter, and especially of the postcript with reference to Treaties of Commerce, shows that, upon the question of Consular relations, M. de Freycinet was justified in saying that no change was made in the operation of the existing Treaties between Madagascar and foreign Powers.

No action necessary, except in case of further French interference.

We do not advise that any further communication should be made to the French Government upon this subject unless and until the French Resident at Madagascar should interfere with the action of the British Consul under the exequatur already obtained; and in that event we advise that the right of the French Resident to interfere should be resisted, and the attention of the French Government should be called to the positive assurance given by M. de Freycinet and to the Memorandum of M. Miot.

Proposed Anglo-Mexican Commercial Treaty. Limits of Maritime jurisdiction.

That it would appear to your Lordship to be in any case necessary to add at the end of the Article the words, "or of civil or criminal jurisdiction." But that before deciding whether the Article, in any form, should be accepted, your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion as to whether it was consistent with the Customs Laws at present in force in this country, and generally whether we considered that the proposed stipulation was open to any objection.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was therefore to request that we would take the papers transmitted therewith into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted in his letter, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

No objection to Mexican Article as amended, or to alternative Article as to enlargement.

That we see no objection to the acceptance either of the original draft Article, with the addition of the words, "or of civil or criminal jurisdiction," or of the alternative draft submitted by the Foreign Office.

The fact that, according to the Customs Laws of this country, jurisdiction cannot be exercised in respect of foreign ships found beyond 1 league from the coast does not, in our judgment, make it improper to accept an Article by which the Mexican Government gives consent to an enlargement of that jurisdiction, in case such enlargement may hereafter be thought advisable.

British claims on Mexico. As to interpretation of Mexican Decree of 1885.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, with reference to a question which had arisen as to the interpretation to be placed upon clause 5 of the 17th Article of the Decree or Law of the Mexican Republic of the 22nd June, 1885, in so far as it applied to the liquidation of certain pecuniary claims on the part of British subjects against the Government of Mexico which arose in respect of the acts of the Federal Government of that Republic anterior to the 27th October, 1884.

That by Article I of the Preliminary Agreement for the renewal of relations between Great Britain and Mexico, which was signed on the 6th August, 1884, and the ratifications of which were exchanged on the 27th October of the same year, the Mexican Government bound themselves to order "an impartial investigation to be made with respect to all the pecuniary claims of British subjects based on acts of the Federal Government of Mexico anterior to the exchange of the ratifications of the Preliminaries, and to provide for the liquidation of the amounts."

That the ratification of the Preliminaries took place on the 27th October, 1884, as already stated.

That on the 22nd June, 1885, a Decree was issued by the Mexican Government relative to the consolidation and conversion of the Mexican National Debt, and that it was provided by Article 17—sub-Article 5 of section 2 of that Decree (which section dealt with "debts to be included in the conversion")—that claims which referred to damages should not form a part of the Public Debt, and consequently should not be included in the operations embraced by the Decree.

That it had also been agreed between the two Governments that the claims referred to in Article I of the Preliminary Agreement should not include the bondholders' debt (see Confidential Print, pp. 31, 41, and 45).

That in consequence of doubts which were entertained by General Berriozabal, the Commissioner appointed on behalf of the Mexican Republic to examine into the claims in conjunction with Mr. Carden, the Representative of Great Britain, as to whether the Mixed Commission was authorized to investigate such of the claims as came within Article 17 of the Law of the 22nd June, 1885, he applied to the Mexican Government for further instructions on the subject.

Instructions sent to Mexican Commissioner.

That those instructions had been furnished to him in a despatch dated the 1st April, 1887, and addressed to him by the Mexican Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and that they had been communicated by him to the British Commissioner, who desired to be informed whether the views expressed by M. Mariscal on the different points of international law treated of in his communication were shared by Her Majesty's Government, and, if not, what course he should pursue when such claims came up for discussion.

That it appeared to your Lordship that those portions of the instructions which limit the extent of the liability of the Federal Government of the Mexican Republic for the acts of its constituent States raise matter for grave consideration, and were opposed to the doctrines hitherto maintained by Her Majesty's Government with reference to the responsibility of the Supreme Government of a Federation in so far as its external relations with foreign nations were concerned for the acts of the Governments of its component States; and that, in connection with that question, to which your Lordship desired more particularly to call our attention, Sir Julian Pauncefote was to inclose a Memorandum which had been prepared in the Foreign Office on the subject of the liability of Federal Governments in such circumstances.

For opinion as to Mexican views.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the views expressed by M. Mariscal on the various points of international law involved might be accepted by Her Majesty's Government without remark, or, if not, in what respects they were open to criticism, and should form the subject of protest.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

Federal Government responsible for acts of State authorities.

That, in our opinion, the limitation placed upon the Ist Article of the Preliminary Agreement by the paragraph numbered 1 of the Mexican Foreign Minister's despatch cannot be admitted by Her Majesty's Government.

The true doctrine is that which has been asserted on previous occasions, especially by Lord John Russell in his instructions to Sir Charles Wyke in 1861, and by the Lord Chancellor and the Law Officers in their Memorandum and opinion of May 1881, that the British Government must deal with the Federal Government, and with that alone, and must insist upon the responsibility of the Federal Government for the acts of State authorities with which the British Government can have no direct relation, and which must be treated as subordinate parts of the Federal Government itself.

Mexican Government liable for acts of former de facto Governments.

Nor can Her Majesty's Government admit the claim of non-liability in respect of losses arising from the acts of the so-called de facto Governments which are stated by the Mexican Foreign Minister to have ruled in Mexico from the 17th December, 1857, to the 24th December, 1860, and from the 1st June, 1863, to the 21st June, 1867.

It is not for Her Majesty's Government to inquire whether such Governments are rightly termed de facto Governments. They must be presumed to have been Governments accepted and obeyed by the people of Mexico, and by the public forces of that State, and Her Majesty's Government must insist that, under the terms of the 1st paragraph of the Preliminary Agreement, British subjects are entitled to the examination and satisfaction of their claims for the acts of any Government which, whether de facto or de jure, has ruled in Mexico.

As to injuries by armed bands.

With regard to paragraph 3, a question of fact appears to arise, with which the Commission will have to deal. If the armed bands spoken of were in any sense employed by, or recognized by, the Federal Government, or if it was through any act, neglect, or default of the Federal Government that such bands were enabled to exist, and to commit the injuries in respect of which compensation is now claimed, it is clear that such injuries would be within the meaning of the 1st paragraph of the Agreement.

Government responsible for acts of its agents who are not private persons.

Paragraph 4 must be admitted, subject to the observation that persons in the service of the Federal Government cannot be considered as private individuals, although the acts complained of may constitute an offence against the common law.

The State is clearly responsible for the excesses and wrongful acts of its agents and servants, whether civil or military.

Explanations to be added to principles on which the Commissioners are to act.

In regard to the observations made by the Mexican Foreign Minister as to the principles by which the Commissioners are to be guided in dealing with the claims which are admitted for discussion, we do not think it necessary to make any observation beyond this: that the general principle expressed in the words, "that in all those cases in which a loss has been sustained in consequence of the exercise of sovereign right, or of an authority intrusted to the Government," the claim would be inadmissible, must be read as if the word "legitimate" were inserted before "exercised," and as if the words, "and lawfully exercised in circumstances constituting a reasonable necessity for such exercise," were inserted after the word "Government."

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, October 31, 1887.

Prosecution of Messrs. Perdicaris and Rolleston by Mr. E. Meakin for conspiracy.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 28th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list with reference to the course which should be adopted by your Lordship in the following circumstances:—

That Mr. Ebenezer Meakin, the nature of whose previous relations with Her Majesty's Consular officials in Morocco would be gathered from the inclosed Reports from ourselves and our predecessors in office, was now prosecuting Messrs. Jon Perdicaris and C. F. Rolleston on a charge of unlawfully conspiring to hurt and damage him, and that in connection with that charge, which was to be heard at Bow Street Police Court on the 2nd November next, he had subpœnaed Mr. White, Her Majesty's Consul at Tangier, to give evidence on his behalf on that occasion.

Consul White subpœnaed as witness.

That the subpœna was served upon Mr. White by Mr. Meakin in person on the evening of Tuesday last (25th October), when, as would be seen from the inclosed letter, Mr. White was on the point of leaving for his post, having taken his passage in the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamer which subsequently left on the 27th instant, and all his baggage being already on board.

That it was believed that Mr. White was not in a position to offer any useful or material evidence in the matter, and that the service of the subpœna on him, on the eve of his departure, was simply vexatious.

That we should perceive from Messrs. Watney, Tilliard, and Co's. letter of the 23rd ultimo that Mr. Meakin had only recently been let out of prison (to which he had been committed for contempt of Court) on plea of ill-health.

That in the present state of affairs in Morocco Mr. White's immediate presence at Tangier was urgently required.

Mr. White ordered to repair to his post.

That your Lordship, therefore, to whom Mr. White applied for instructions, had felt it to be your Lordship's duty, in the public interest, to direct him not to postpone his return thereto on account of the subpœna thus served on him.

That it now became necessary, however, to consider generally Mr. White's position with regard to the Court, and also more particularly what steps (if any) should be taken, either previously or at the hearing, on behalf of your Lordship, as well as of Mr. White, to inform the Court of the circumstances under which Mr. White had been compelled to disobey their summons.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to add that your Lordship, having been compelled by the exigencies of the public service to order Mr. White to return forthwith to his post, notwithstanding the order of the Court, was particularly anxious that all possible deference and respect should be paid to the Court in regard to any explanation which we might think it advisable that your Lordship should afford them.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted therein, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case, at our earliest possible convenience.

In obedience to our Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Explanatory letter should be sent to the Court.

That, in our opinion, it would be advisable that a clerk from the Foreign Office should attend at Bow Street on the 2nd November, and hand to the magistrate a letter from the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, stating that prior to being served with the subpœna on the 25th October Mr. White had engaged to leave for Morocco on the morning of the 27th, and that it being in the judgment of Her Majesty's Government of urgent public importance that Mr. White should at once return to his post, he was directed so to do, and accordingly left by the vessel in which his passage was taken. A copy of Mr. White's letter of the 26th October may also be handed to the magistrate.

My Lord,
Royal Courts of Justice, December 15, 1887.

Claim of R. C. Bowker and Co. to money paid into Consulate at Mogador on behalf of Mr. Curtis.

That the circumstances under which Messrs. Bowker's claim had arisen were shortly set out in a Report upon its subject furnished in April of last year to the then Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs by our immediate predecessors in office, and that further details respecting its present aspect and position were to be found in Consul Payton's despatch No. 24 of the 14th October last, to which Sir Julian Pauncefote was to direct our especial attention.

Death of Mr. Curtis beyond doubt.

That the death of Mr. Curtis in the Soudan in 1885 appeared to be established beyond the range of reasonable doubt, and that it would also seem improbable that his legal personal representative, who had been ascertained to be his widow, had any intention of applying for probate or letters of administration in respect of his estate, which, so far as was known, consisted solely of the sum of 138*l.* odd already alluded to.

That by Article 34 of the Morocco Order in Council of the 27th August, 1857, Her Majesty's Consul was empowered "to grant probate of will or letters of administration to the intestate estate of any British subject . . . . who shall die and leave property within the dominions of the Sultan of Morocco; and if such probate or letters of administration shall not be applied for within thirty days after the death of the deceased person, it shall be lawful for the Consul to administer to the estate of such person, and for so doing to reserve to himself, out of the proceeds of such estate, a commission not exceeding 2½ per cent. on the amount thereof."

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, Her Majesty's Consul might now properly be instructed to proceed with the administration of the late Mr. Curtis' estate in accordance with the provision of the Order in Council.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Consul may administer his estate. He should give notice of his intention.

That, in our opinion, it is undoubtedly competent for Her Majesty's Consul at Mogador to take upon himself the administration of Mr. Curtis' estate; but, having regard to the circumstances disclosed in Mr. Payton's despatch, we do not think it would be desirable for him to do so without giving notice to the widow, whose address is known, and to Mr. Grace, and any other creditor whose name is known, to bring in claims.

Pilotage certificates.

Bill for limiting grant to British subjects.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 23rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to the issue of certificates of pilotage under the provisions of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," sections 340, 342, and 355, to the masters and mates of foreign ships.

That a Bill for the purpose of amending those sections in the manner therein mentioned had been lately introduced into Parliament, and that should that measure eventually pass into law, it was conceived that it might become necessary to modify the practice which had, with a short interval, continuously obtained since the year 1852, of granting such certificates to the masters and mates of foreign ships, as well as to those of British vessels; and that it was possible that any such alteration of the existing practice might be resisted by foreign Governments, on the ground that it was inconsistent with certain of the Treaty obligations existing between this country and themselves.

That the Netherlands Government had already protested against the action of Her Majesty's Government in declining, on the ground of the inability, according to Dutch law, of the Netherlands to grant reciprocal treatment to the masters and mates of British ships when in Dutch waters, to issue certificates of pilotage to the masters and mates of Dutch vessels in English waters, and had based their protest, in the first place, upon the wording of Article II of the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation of the 27th October, 1837, between Great Britain and the Netherlands, which they contended entitled the masters and mates of Dutch vessels in British waters to the same privileges as were extended to the masters and mates of our own national ships therein; and, secondly, upon Article I of the Anglo-Dutch Convention of the 27th March, 1851, which contained a provision of somewhat similar purport.

That it was to the bearing and effect upon the measure now before Parliament of Article II and of Article I respectively of the Treaty and Convention above alluded to that your Lordship desired to draw our attention with a view to our favouring your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion as to whether the provisions of that Bill were in any, and, if so, to what extent, inconsistent with the stipulations of those Articles with respect to "duties of pilotage."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Clauses of Bill conflicting.

That the clauses of the proposed Bill somewhat conflict with one another, but by clauses 4 and 5 it is proposed that certificates shall not be granted by the Board of Trade to the masters and mates of foreign ships, even though they are British subjects.

Probably section 3, though differently worded, was intended to contain a similar prohibition, but as it stands the word "and" in line 15 gives the clause a more limited construction.

Points in which Bill agrees or conflicts with Treaties.

In our opinion, the limitation of the grant of pilotage certificates to British subjects would not conflict with the provisions of the Treaties referred to in the covering letter; but the refusal to grant pilotage certificates to a British subject, on the ground that he is the master or mate of a foreign ship, or the refusal to allow a British subject, holding a pilotage certificate, to act as pilot when master or mate of a foreign ship, would, in our opinion, be inconsistent with the Treaties.

Mr. Godden's complaints against Dutch authorities of Curaçao.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 9th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers, noted in the accompanying list, relative to various complaints put forward by Mr. John Godden, a British subject, against the Dutch Colonial authorities of the Island of Curaçao, in respect of which he had invoked the intervention, on his behalf, of Her Majesty's Government with that of the Netherlands.

That the nature of these complaints would be found detailed, in Mr. Godden's own language, in the printed statement of his grievances which he forwarded last December to the Secretary of State, and in his later Memorandum of the 24th January, 1887, and the documents thereto annexed.

That it would be observed that one of those complaints, viz., that made by Mr Godden against the rate and manner of assessment of a tax upon his estate at Santa Barbara, in the Island of Curaçao, had already been dealt with in a letter (the terms of which were approved by our predecessors* in office) addressed, by the direction of the then Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, to Mr. Godden on the 30th April of last year.

That Mr. Godden, however, was much dissatisfied with the decision then arrived at, and had continued to urge his supposed claims for redress in that and other respects mentioned in his statement with great persistence and energy, and that he had thereby enlisted on his behalf a certain measure of sympathy amongst persons of some position both in and out of Parliament.

That having regard to that circumstance, and to the many and complicated considerations depending almost entirely upon Dutch law which were raised in the case, it was thought advisable to lay the papers before a Dutch advocate of eminence with a view to obtaining an authoritative exposition of the Dutch law on the various points involved.

Opinion of M. de Brauw.

That the papers were accordingly submitted to M. de Brauw, of the Hague, a gentleman who had on previous occasions been consulted on other matters involving Dutch law by Her Majesty's Government; and that he had furnished a reasoned Report thereon, which was on all points unfavourable to the claims of Mr. Godden.

That before, however, proceeding to take any action upon that Report, your Lordship desired to be informed whether its conclusions and reasoning commanded our general assent; and that, in the event of our agreeing with the views expressed by M. de Brauw, your Lordship proposed to inform Mr. Godden that, after a most careful examination of his case, Her Majesty's Government did not consider that there were any sufficient grounds for addressing a representation to the Dutch Government on his behalf.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted in that letter, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Questions only arise as to first and fifth cases.

That, in our opinion, it is only on the first case that a substantial question arises. The fourth has already been properly disposed of, and the second and third are questions of local administration, and no right possessed by Mr. Godden is alleged to to have been violated.

Upon the first question we are unable to agree with the opinion of M. de Brauw. His translation of the second paragraph of the Ordinance is as follows: "In the grant of grounds is not included the right of making mines and pits under the trodden ground, clay-pits included, no owner of grounds being entitled thereto before having obtained the permission of the Government. Neither may the blasting of stones take place without permission, and then under observance of the existing Regulations." In our judgment this does not amount to a reservation of the property in the minerals, and still less of any right of going upon the land granted in order to take them. It is nothing more than a restriction upon the concessionnaire, by which he is prevented from breaking the surface in order to take minerals without the permission of the Government. We are of opinion that the Government had no right to put up to tender and grant to Mr. Sewell a licence to go upon Mr. Godden's land and take minerals thereout. We think it is not reasonable to expect Mr. Godden to sue Dutch subjects in a Dutch Court for wrongs authorized by the Dutch Government. It is the Dutch Government which is primarily responsible for the injury he has suffered, and we think a claim should be made for payment to Mr. Godden and those claiming under him, of a fair equivalent for the profit made by the working of phosphates by the Dutch Company upon his land.

Should claim compensation for working minerals on Mr. Godden's lands.

Refusal to give copy of Register of Mortgages not justifiable.

The fifth case, namely, the refusal to furnish Mr. Godden with a copy of the Register of Mortgages (see rider A to printed statement), appears, upon the information before us, to disclose unjustifiable action upon the part of the authorities, and, if the grievance be substantial, Mr. Godden's claim in this matter also should, in our opinion, be supported.

We have, &c.

Repudiation of Inca notes by the Governments of Peru.

transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list with reference to the issue of a forced currency, denominated Inca notes, by the Government of Señor Nicholas Pierola in 1879, and their repudiation by subsequent Governments of Peru.

That the two cases referred to in the accompanying papers were not precisely on the same footing.

Claim of the London Bank of Mexico.

That, in the representation made by the London Bank of Mexico, it was stated that the Inca notes having been declared by Decrees of Señor Pierola (18th October and 5th November, 1880, Inclosures in letter from Bank) forced currency, and their acceptance being compulsory, his Government compelled the Bank to give Sol notes in exchange for Incas at a certain rate, and that the Bank was also compelled in the course of its ordinary business to receive a large sum of Incas, which it still held, as well as those which it had to receive by force from the Government.

That the letter from the Bank further stated that if the Decree (Inclosure in their letter A) recently issued by the Government of Peru, declaring that all the internal Governmental Acts of Nicholas de Pierola and Miguel Iglesias null and void, should be carried out, the Inca notes, already much depreciated in value, would probably become waste paper.

That the Bank represented that although their Branch was appointed receiver of the security for the Inca notes by the Decree of Señor Pierola of the 18th October, 1880, that appointment was made without the concurrence of their Branch, and without reference to it, and that their manager had addressed a communication to the Government declining the responsibility attaching to the appointment without the authorization of the head office in London, which was never given.

That the applicants asked that Her Majesty's Representative in Peru might be instructed to take steps to prevent, as far as possible, the Decree of Repudiation from being carried out.

Claim of Mr. Aitken.

That the other claim was that of a bill broker, a British subject established at Lima, named Mr. Aitken (Inclosure in Colonel Mansfield's despatch No. 48 of the 16th November).

That he was holder of Inca notes, and that he wished that Her Majesty's Representative should take such steps as might be necessary to have the Decree of Repudiation annulled, and to prevail upon the Government of Peru to provide for the immediate payment of the Incas held by him in accordance with the Decree of the 18th October, 1880.

That we should observe that it was not alleged that Mr. Aitken was forced by the Government of the country to accept those Inca notes in exchange for other currency, as was represented to have been the case as regarded the Bank; and that Her Majesty's Minister stated in his despatch concerning Mr. Aitken's application, that he understood that that gentleman purchased the notes as a speculation.

That, on the issue of the Decree of the 24th October last (Inclosures 1 and 2 in Colonel Mansfield's despatch No. 47 of the 2nd November), annulling all internal Acts of the Government of Señor Nicholas Pierola and General Iglesias, Her Majesty's Minister addressed a note to the Peruvian Government (Inclosure 3), stating that Her Majesty's Government would never admit the principle that the present and any subsequent Government of Peru were not responsible for the acts of the Governments of Señor Nicholas Pierola and General Iglesias, which were recognized by Her Majesty's Government and all other Powers having diplomatic relations with Peru. That that intimation to the Peruvian Government, as well as a subsequent note which he had addressed to them (Inclosure 6), in reply to some observations contained in a note from Señor Ribeyro (Inclosures 4 and 5), had received the approval of Her Majesty's Government.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take into our consideration the papers which accompanied his letter; and that we would favour the Secretary of State with our opinion as to there being any good ground for representations to the Government of Peru either in the case of—

1. The application from the London Bank of Mexico and South America; or,
2. The claim put forward by Mr. Aitken.

In obedience to the commands of the Secretary of State we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

Should not support Mr. Aitken's claim;

That, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government would not be justified in making or supporting any claim on behalf of Mr. Aitken in respect of the Inca notes which he may hold.

nor those of Bank, either as to notes received in business, or as to those received under compulsion.

With regard to the Bank of Mexico, the case is somewhat different. So far as relates to Inca notes received by them in the course of their ordinary business, we are of opinion that they stand in the same position as Mr. Aitken, and that no claim should receive the support of the Government. But it is stated in the papers, in vague terms, that they were compelled by force to give Sol notes in exchange for Incas at a certain rate. No statement is before us as to the exact nature of the compulsion used, or as to the terms of exchange with reference to the real and nominal values of the Sol note and Inca note respectively, nor are we told whether the Bank made any complaint or protest at the time, whether it retained the Inca notes from choice or from necessity, or whether any part of the funds intended as security for such notes was, in fact, received by the Bank. In the absence of details, we cannot advise Her Majesty's Government to support any claim on the part of the Bank.

Repudiation of Inca notes.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the application which was lately made by the London Bank of Mexico and South America for the support of Her Majesty's Government with reference to a claim which that Bank considered they possessed upon the Peruvian Government in regard to the issue of a forced currency, denominated "Inca notes," by the Government of Señor Nicholas Pierola, and their subsequent repudiation by successive Governments of the Republic.

That the transactions in question were referred to us at some length on the 6th January last, and formed the subject of a Report, which we were good enough to transmit to your Lordship on the 31st January; and that upon the 7th ultimo a letter (of which the draft was inclosed for our information) was, by your Lordship's direction, addressed to the London Bank of Mexico and South America, embodying the terms of that Report.

Claim of London Bank of Mexico for forced exchange of Sol for inca notes.

That to that letter the Bank had replied, giving further particulars with respect to the extraction of the Sol notes from their Lima branch, and as to other matters upon which more precise information was desired.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that, with reference to the last paragraph of our Report of the 31st January last, we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether, under the circumstances described in the letter of the London Bank of Mexico of the 16th ultimo and its inclosures, Her Majesty's Government should now require from the Government of Peru compensation for the Bank in respect of the Sol notes so extracted.

New Salvadorian Law as to foreigners and nationality.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, with reference to certain provisions, relative to foreigners and to the conditions by which nationality was to be determined in Salvador, which were contained in the new Law of that Republic.

That some of those provisions had formed the subject of exceptions by the Government of the United States of America, and that Her Majesty's Minister and Consul-General for Salvador had also forwarded, for your Lordship's consideration, various criticisms and points of inquiry arising upon them, to which your Lordship desired to direct our attention.

Objectionable points.

That in addition to the various points which were dealt with in the two papers (A) and (B), the provisions in Article 49 with respect to the expulsion from the country as pernicious persons of delinquents, which phrase seemed to be used rather with reference to persons merely charged with an offence than to persons actually convicted of a crime, were liable to comment; while Article 53, by which it was provided that "in crimes of rebellion and sedition the foreign character of the delinquent shall always be considered as an aggravating circumstance in imposing the penalty," appeared open to graver objection.

Question of protest.

That with respect to the form and manner of protest which had been adopted on some previous occasions where the legislative or constitutional changes, which were at the time in contemplation by other Central American States, were considered by Her Majesty's Government objectionable in principle, Sir Julian Pauncefote was to call our special attention to the accompanying Foreign Office Memorandum of the 21st November, 1884.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion:—

(1) As to whether, and in what respects, the proposed new Law was open to objection; and (2) If it were objectionable, as to whether, and to what extent, a protest might properly be addressed by Her Majesty's Government to that of Salvador upon the subject; and (3) With any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers transmitted with Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in our opinion some of the provisions of the proposed Law are objectionable.

Objections to certain points.

Articles 26 and 27 are objectionable in that they purport to make the Certificate of Matriculation essential before any rights can be acquired by a British subject.

Article 29, sub-section 2, and Articles 28-41 are objectionable on the ground that they purport to limit or restrict the diplomatic interference of Her Majesty's Government for the protection of the rights of British subjects.

With regard to Article 49, the right of expulsion cannot be denied to the Salvadorian Government, but its unreasonable exercise would justify diplomatic intervention.

It is not clear from the terms of Article 53 whether that Article has the effect of establishing a difference between the native subject and the foreigner, in regard to the punishment which may be inflicted for a particular offence, or whether it is simply a direction to the Judge as to the exercise of his discretion in awarding punishment. If it operates to subject the foreigner to a different punishment from that to which the native subject is liable, it is clearly objectionable, and should be specially noted in the diplomatic remonstrances which we now advise.

May properly protest.

We are of opinion that Her Majesty's Government may properly address a protest to the Government of Salvador, pointing out the Articles objected to and stating, in similar terms to those that were employed in the case of Guatemala, that they cannot allow the new Law to restrict the right of a British subject to claim the intervention of his Government in any case in which it would be justified by the law of nations.

As to manner of protesting

The usual practice should, in our opinion, be followed, namely, of acting in concert with the Representatives of other nations, and sending separate but identic notes.

We have, &c.

No. 53.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received April 8.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, April 7, 1887.

Michell v. Bush. Plaintiff, an unregistered British subject, assumes Siamese nationality.

That it would be seen that Mr. Michell, although undoubtedly a natural-born British subject, refused to register himself as such in accordance with the provisions of section 29 of the Siam Order in Council of the 28th July, 1856, and had, moreover, recently filed affidavits in the proceeding of "Michell v. Bush," then pending before

Her Majesty's Consular Court for Siam, in which he described himself as a Siamese subject.

Refusal of Consular Court to hear case.

That in those circumstances the British Minister and Consul-General had at present refused on the grounds which were stated in his own despatch of the 10th January, 1887 (Mr. Satow's No. 3, Confidential), and in Mr. Michell's letter of the 3rd January, 1887 (Inclosure 1 in Mr. Satow's No. 3, Confidential), to entertain a plaint which had been presented by Mr. Michell unless it was forwarded to him by the Siamese Minister for Foreign Affairs.

That it was provided by Article 2 of the Commercial Agreement of the 13th May, 1856 (commonly known as the "Parkes Agreement"), and supplementary to the Treaty between Great Britain and Siam of the previous year, that "all civil cases in which both parties are British subjects, or which the defendant is a British subject, shall be heard and determined by the British Consul alone," and that section 5 of the Siam Order in Council of the 28th July, 1856, further ordered that "it shall be lawful for Her Majesty's Consul to hear and determine any suit of a civil nature against a British subject arising within any part of the dominions of the Kings of Siam, whether such suit be instituted by a subject of the Kings of Siam, or by the subject or citizen of a foreign State in amity with Her Majesty, subject in case either party be dissatisfied with the decision of the Consul to an appeal to the Supreme Court at Singapore."

That section 29 of the same Order in Council provided that a register should be kept of all British subjects residing within the Kingdom of Siam, and that every British subject who might arrive within the dominions of the King of Siam "shall, within a reasonable time after his arrival, apply to the Consul to be enrolled in such register, and any British subject who shall refuse or neglect to make application to be so enrolled, and who shall not be able to excuse to the satisfaction of the said Consul such his refusal or neglect, shall not be entitled to be recognized or protected as a British subject in any difficulties or suits whatsoever in which he may have been involved within the dominions of the Kings of Siam within the time during which he shall not have been so enrolled."

That it was conceived that any British subject neglecting to register himself as such, and being unable to excuse his neglect in that respect to the satisfaction of the Consul, would lose, among other privileges, the right of suing as plaintiff in the British Consular Courts, and, further, that in the particular case then before the Court, Mr. Michell could not be allowed to sue in the character of a Siamese subject until he had established to the satisfaction of the Court that he had become voluntarily naturalized in Siam, and had within the terms of section 6 of "The Nationalization Act, 1870," ceased to be a British subject.

That the Consul-General, however, as would be seen from his despatch, elected to treat Mr. Michell as a Siamese subject, on the mere assertion of that gentleman that he was suing in that character, and he refused to entertain his suit on the ground that the plaint had not been forwarded through the Siamese Minister for Foreign Affairs.

That the following questions seemed to arise in relation to the case:—

1. Could the Consular Court properly decline to entertain Mr. Michell's suit until he should have registered himself as a British subject, under paragraph 29 of the Order in Council, or until he should have established, to the satisfaction of the Court, that he had become voluntarily naturalized in Siam, and had ceased to be a British subject?

2. Could the Consular Court impose on Siamese plaintiffs the condition that their plaints should be forwarded through the Siamese Minister for Foreign Affairs, in view of the terms of Article 2 of the Parkes Agreement and of paragraph 5 of the Order in Council of 1856?

That, before instructions as to his future action with regard to Mr. Michell were dispatched to the Consul-General, your Lordship desired to be favoured with our opinion on the questions submitted in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Defendant being British, Consular Court has jurisdiction.

1. That the Consular Court cannot properly decline to entertain Mr. Michell's suit until he has complied with the conditions mentioned in the question, as the fact that the defendant is a British subject brings the case within the jurisdiction of the Consul without regard to the nationality of the plaintiff.

Siamese not obliged to forward plaints through their Foreign Minister.

2. The Consular Court cannot impose on Siamese plaintiffs the condition that their plaints shall be forwarded through the Siamese Minister for Foreign Affairs.

Consul must hear and decide case according to the law.

We think it the clear duty of the Consul to hear and decide the case according to law without regard to any impression he may have formed as to Mr. Michell's objects in bringing the suit.

No. 54.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received April 18.)

My Lord,
Royal Courts of Justice, April 15, 1887.

Registration of British subjects.

That such registration had already been made compulsory by Article 29 of the Siam Order in Council of the 28th July, 1856, but that no provision had been inserted in that Article, as was done subsequently in the analogous clauses of the Levant, and of the China and Japan Orders in Council, relating to the compulsory registration of British subjects in the Levant and in China and Japan respectively, empowering the imposition of a pecuniary fine upon those persons who neglected or refused to register themselves, and who were unable to excuse their failure so to do to the satisfaction of the Consular officer.

That it was found that some such power was essential to the practical working of the Article, and that the inclosed Regulations which had, on the 5th January, 1885, been pronounced to be "unobjectionable in point of form" by the then Law Officers of the Crown, and which had subsequently, on the 18th November, 1885, been also approved by their successors, were, on the 20th July, 1886, finally approved by the Secretary of State.

Question as to validity of the new Regulations,

That the Regulations purported, as would be seen, to be made by Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Siam by virtue of the powers vested in him by section 1 of the Order in Council of the 28th day of July, 1856, to make Rules and Regulations for the peace, order, and good governance of Her Majesty's subjects being within the dominions of the Kings of Siam, and that it was now contended on behalf of certain of the British residents who objected to them, that they were not such Regulations as came properly within the description of "Rules and Regulations for the peace, order, and good governance of Her Majesty's subjects being within the dominions of the Kings of Siam," and that they were consequently ultra vires, and of no effect.

and power to make them under existing Order in Council.

That it was further contended that such Regulations could only be enacted by means of an amending Order in Council, and that, as bearing more especially upon that latter point, Sir Julian Pauncefote was to inclose a Memorandum by the Attorney-General for the Straits Settlements.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion as to whether the Regulations in question were valid or not, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Proposed Regulations, except No. 3, can now be made.

That, in our opinion, the proposed Regulations, with the exception of No. 3, are valid, and can be made under the existing Order in Council.

By the Treaty of the 18th April, 1855, Article II, it was provided that the interests of all British subjects coming to Siam should be placed under the regulation and control of the Consul, who should enforce the observance by British subjects of all the provisions of the Treaty, and give effect to all Rules and Regulations that might thereafter be enacted for the government of British subjects in Siam.

By the same Treaty, Article V, it was provided that all British subjects intending to reside in Siam should be registered at the British Consulate, that they should not go out to sea, or proceed beyond the limits assigned by Treaty for the residence of British subjects, without a passport to be applied for by the British Consul.

The Order in Council of the 28th July, 1856, by Article 1, gave the Consul the power to enforce, by fine or imprisonment, the observance of the stipulations of any Treaty, or of Regulations appended to any Treaty, and to make and enforce, by fine or imprisonment, Rules and Regulations for the observance of the stipulations of Treaties, and for the peace, order, and good government of Her Majesty's subjects within the dominions of Siam.

By Article 2 any Rule or Regulations to be enforced by a penalty is to be submitted to Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

By Article 29 it is provided that a Register shall be kept of all British subjects residing within the dominions of the Kingdom of Siam. That every British subject shall be enrolled on such Register, and that every subject who may arrive shall, within a reasonable time, apply to the Consul to be enrolled. The Article further provides that any British subject who shall refuse or neglect to be so enrolled, and who is not able to excuse such refusal or neglect, shall not be entitled to be recognized or protected as a British subject.

Duties and powers of Consul as to registration.

In the face of these provisions, it is, in our opinion, clearly the duty of the Consul to see that a correct Register is kept, and it is within his power to order the Register to be corrected annually, and, subject to the approval of the Secretary of State, to provide a penalty for non-registration.

No power to levy fee for registration.

We do not, however, see by what authority the Consul is entitled to levy a fee on registration. It is the duty of British subjects to get themselves registered, and it may be necessary for the Consul to enforce observance of the Treaty and Regulations by penalty, but we do not, at present, see any authority for making a charge upon those who are compelled to perform a duty enforced by Treaty and Order in Council.

We have, &c.

Annex.

Draft Regulations (amended).

The following Regulation made by the Undersigned, Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Siam, in virtue of the powers vested in him by section 1 of the Order in Council of the 28th day of July, 1856, to make Rules and Regulations for the peace, order, and good governance of Her Majesty's subjects being within the dominions of the Kings of Siam, and approved by Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, is hereby notified for the information of British subjects:—

1. Every British subject resident in Bangkok, or within twenty-four hours' journey thereof, and every British subject resident in Chiengmai, or within twenty-four hours' journey thereof, being of the age of 21 years or upwards, or being married, or a widower or widow, though under that age, shall, in the month of January 1886, and in every subsequent year, register himself or herself in the register-book kept for that purpose, either at Her Majesty's Consulate-General in Bangkok or at Her Majesty's Vice-Consulate at Chiengmai, and all British subjects resident in Siam beyond those limits shall, in like manner, register themselves as early as may conveniently be in the year 1886 and every subsequent year, subject to this qualification, that the registration of a man shall be deemed to include the registration of his wife unless she is living apart from him, and that the registration of the head of a family, whether male or female, shall be deemed to comprise the registration of all females being relatives to the head of the family (in whatever degree of relationship) living under the same roof with the head of the family at the time of his or her registration.

2. Any British subject failing so to register himself or herself, and not excusing his or her failure to the satisfaction of the Consular officer, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding 20 ticals for each instance of such failure.
3. Every person on registration of himself or herself shall pay a fee of 2 ticals.
4. The Consular officer shall issue to every person so registered a certificate of registration under his hand and Consular seal, which certificate shall be given up in exchange for a new certificate on each occasion of re-registration, and failure to produce the previous certificate, or to satisfactorily account for its non-production, shall render the person so failing liable to a fine not exceeding 20 ticals.
5. The transfer or loan of a certificate of registration shall render the person so transferring or lending to another liable to a penalty of 100 ticals.
6. The use of a certificate of registration by any other than the person to whom it was granted shall render the person so using such certificate liable to a penalty of 100 ticals.
7. The provisions of this Regulation shall be applicable only to British subjects resident, or intending to reside, in Siam; they shall be bound to take out a certificate of registration within one month of their arrival in the country.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received May 2.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, May 2, 1887.

Claim of Mr. E. B. Michell, a British subject in Siam, to exemption from Consular jurisdiction.

His claims to Siamese nationality

That Mr. Michell, although he had persistently claimed in the course of various controversies with the Minister Resident to be a Siamese subject, and had even sworn one or more affidavits before the Consular authorities in which he had so described and represented himself, was undoubtedly a natural-born British subject, and admittedly continued of that nationality up to the time of his taking up his residence in his present capacity at Bangkok.

not formally recognized by Siamese Government.

That he had since received no formal recognition by the Siamese Government as a subject of Siam, nor did he suggest any other manner in which he had "voluntarily become naturalized" in that State, so as to be deemed (under the provisions of section 6 of "The Naturalization Act, 1870") "to have ceased to be a British subject, and be regarded as an alien."

His refusal to be registered as a British subject.

That he had, however, refused to enrol himself as a British subject in the Consular Register at Bangkok in accordance with the provisions of section 29 of the Siam Order in Council of the 28th July, 1856, had protested against the publication of his name in the list of British subjects liable to serve on juries, and had in other ways declined to recognize and protested against the exercise of any kind of Consular jurisdiction over him.

Claim on account of Siamese domicil.

That in addition to his original claim to exemption from the jurisdiction of the Consular Court, on the ground that he was a Siamese subject, Mr. Michell now apparently claimed to be exempt from such jurisdiction on the further and separate ground that he was domiciled in Siam.

That it appeared to be open to some doubt whether, as a matter of fact, his domicile was Siamese, but that, even assuming that such was the case, it was conceived that he would not, on that account, or so long as he continued to be a British subject, be exempt from British Consular jurisdiction.

Refusal to recognize his claims.

That, acting under the advice of the Attorney-General for the Straits Settlements, Her Majesty's Minister Resident at Bangkok had refused to recognize the validity of Mr. Michell's claims, and had, under the circumstances, detailed in his despatch No. 20 of the 28th February, allowed a suit which had been brought in the Consular Court against Mr. Michell to proceed to a hearing and determination.

Judgment against him.

That Judgment in that action had been given against Mr. Michell, and that the usual notice of Decree had been served upon him.

That Mr. Michell, however, refused to recognize the validity of that Decree, and styled the service of the notice upon him as a "gross breach of international law and comity."

That he had referred the matter to the Siamese Minister for Foreign Affairs, who had promised to communicate with Her Majesty's Minister Resident upon the subject, who, pending the receipt of that communication, and of instructions from the Secretary of State, had not directed any further action to be taken in the matter.

Question as to:—

That in those circumstances, Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to—

(1) his British nationality.
(2) Jurisdiction over him.

1. Whether Mr. E. B. Michell had ceased to be a British subject or not.

2. Whether, assuming that he had lost his British domicil of origin and acquired a Siamese domicil by choice, that fact would, so long as he remained a British subject, in any respect exempt him from the jurisdiction of the British Consular Courts in Siam?

(3) Execution of Judgment against him.

3. Whether, if Mr. Michell were still a British subject, the Minister Resident should, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, proceed to enforce the registration of that gentleman as such under the provisions of paragraphs 1 and 2 of the Registration Regulations, and should now permit the execution of the Judgment which had already been obtained against Mr. Michell in the action in the Consular Court to proceed?

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to add that your Lordship would be glad to be favoured at the same time with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have taken the papers transmitted with Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

No proof of his loss of British nationality. Being British he is not exempt from Consular jurisdiction. His registration should be enforced, and Judgment executed.

1. That there is no evidence before us that Mr. E. B. Michell has ceased to be a British subject.

2. Assuming Mr. Michell to have, in fact, lost his British domicil of origin and acquired a Siamese domicil of choice, this fact would not, in our opinion, exempt him from the jurisdiction of the British Consular Courts in Siam, so long as he remained a British subject.

3. In our opinion, the Minister Resident should proceed to enforce the registration of Mr. Michell, under the provisions of the Registration Regulations, and should now permit the execution of the Judgment obtained against Mr. Michell to proceed.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received May 23.)

My Lord,
Royal Courts of Justice, May 21, 1887.

Regulation for registration of British subjects.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 14th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, with reference to the expediency of re-enacting by Order in Council the provisions of the Regulation issued last year by Her Majesty's Minister Resident and Consul-General at Bangkok, with the approval of the then Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, for the purpose of more effectually securing the registration of British subjects in Siam.

Question as to its validity.

That it would be remembered that, in consequence of doubts having arisen as to the competence of the Minister Resident to issue such a Regulation in virtue of the powers vested in him by section 1 of the Siam Order in Council of the 28th July, 1856, the question of its validity was referred to us on the 18th March of this year, and that on the 15th of the following month we reported in effect that, although the remainder of the Regulation was valid, it was, in our opinion, beyond the powers of the Minister Resident to enforce paragraph 3 thereof which prescribed that "every person on registration shall pay a fee of 2 ticals."

Fees illegally levied.

That instructions were consequently sent to the Minister Resident directing him to cease imposing, for the future, any fee under that paragraph.

That he had, however, already levied thereunder fees amounting to upwards of 200*l.*, and was, and still is, being threatened with legal proceedings for the recovery of fees thus exacted from them by certain hostile members of the British community at Bangkok.

Proposed issue of an Order in Council having a retrospective effect.

That it had been suggested that an Order in Council might be issued, embodying the Regulation in a schedule, and declaring that it should be deemed to be, and to have been from the 19th March, 1886, the date of its promulgation, as binding and of as full legal force and effect as if it had been originally enacted by Order in Council.

That such an Order would, under section 4 of "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1878," be unimpeachable, and would, by legalizing retrospectively the levy of any fees which had already actually been collected, not only relieve Her Majesty's Treasury from some difficulty with regard to the proper mode of dealing with those fees, but would also furnish the Minister Resident, as was thought, with the most effective means of meeting the legal proceedings with which he had been threatened; and which, there was reason to believe, were likely to be persisted in as having been instigated rather by desire, as far as possible, to embarrass his position and weaken his authority, than from any bonâ fide intention on the part of those who were initiating them to vindicate their own rights.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to add that there were precedents for ratifying by retrospection the exercise of a jurisdiction originally excessive; and that, as a similar registration fee was levied in China, Japan, the Levant, and other places where the Queen enjoyed ex-territorial jurisdiction, no practical hardship would appear to be inflicted by validating retrospectively paragraph 3 of the Regulation under which that fee had been levied in Siam.

That the Supreme Court of the Straits Settlements had, under section 24 of the Siam Order in Council, concurrent jurisdiction with the Consular Court of Siam in regard to all civil suits between British subjects arising within any part of the dominions of the Kings of Siam; and that sections 6 and 7 of the same Order provided for an appeal to the Supreme Court at Singapore in all such cases when they had been in the first instance decided in the Consular Court of Siam.

That it was conceived therefore that the Minister Resident was, like other British residents in Siam, amenable to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court at Singapore, and that if a civil action for the recovery of a fee improperly levied should be brought against him in that Court, he would have to enter an appearance thereto in the ordinary course, but that such a retrospective provision as had been suggested above would, entirely apart from other and separate defences which might also be open to him, form in itself a valid and sufficient defence to the Minister Resident in the event of any such action being proceeded with.

That before advising the Minister Resident on that point, however, your Lordship desired to be confirmed or otherwise in the correctness of the above view by us; and that your Lordship would also be glad, at the same time, to be favoured with our opinion as to whether the issue of an Order in Council in the form suggested, or in any other form, was, under all the circumstances of the case, desirable; and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the question.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That in our opinion the action to be taken in this case must be determined more by considerations of policy than of law.

Retrospective Order in Council undesirable.

As a matter of law we think it is not desirable to make an Order in Council having a retrospective effect, and purporting to render lawful the taking of fees which were not, at the time they were received, sanctioned by the Act of Parliament 6 Geo. IV., cap. 87, or the Order in Council of the 1st May, 1855.

Fees illegally levied should be repaid.

In our judgment, the amounts so charged should, when demanded, be repaid. But as a matter of policy, so far as it is for us, we may point out that Mr. Satow received the fees under Regulations which had received the sanction of the Home Government, and as, having regard to the provisions of the 6 Geo. IV., cap. 87, the existence of these Regulations might not afford any defence, they do, in our opinion, warrant Her Majesty's Government in protecting Mr. Satow against actions as far as possible.

Mr. Satow should be protected by an Order in Council.

We think, therefore, that an Order in Council rendering valid Mr. Satow's acts, and relieving him from any penalties might, on that ground, be desirable.

He is amenable to jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Singapore.

The Minister Resident is, so far as we can see, amenable, like other British subjects residing in Siam, to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Singapore.

Such an Order would, in our opinion, afford a sufficient answer to any proceedings.

Order in Council removing doubts as to validity of.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 14th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying draft of an Order in Council for the purpose of removing doubts which had arisen with respect to the validity of the Registration Regulation (Siam) of the 19th March, 1886, set out in the Schedule thereto.

That the Report with which we favoured your Lordship upon the 21st May last, with reference to the expediency of issuing such an Order in Council, as well as the papers upon which that Report was founded, were also inclosed; and that Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take those into our further consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the draft Order in Council met the requirements of the case, and might be approved.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we approve the draft Order in Council as altered and initialled by us.

Fees received before date of new Order should be returned.

In our opinion fees received before the date of the new Order in Council should be returned in order to avoid litigation, the result of which cannot be regarded as certain.

My Lord,

British Consular jurisdiction over Mr. E. B. Michell. Steps for enforcing.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying draft of a despatch which had been addressed to Mr. Gould,* Her Majesty's Acting Chargé d'Affaires at Bangkok, with reference to the steps which it appeared desirable for him now to take for the purpose of vindicating the Consular Court against the persistent attempts of Mr. E. B. Michell to set its authority at defiance.

That the proceedings of that gentleman had already rendered more than one reference to us necessary, and would, it was thought, be clearly within our recollection.

That two of the Reports† which we had been good enough to furnish to your Lordship with respect to this question in its various phases were inclosed therewith.

That the substance of the first two paragraphs of our Report of the 2nd May last was at once communicated, by telegraph, to Mr. Gould, but that it was thought at that time advisable, out of courtesy to the Siamese Government, having regard to the confidential position held by Mr. Michell in their service, to forbear from actually instructing Mr. Gould to proceed in the sense of the third paragraph of that Report until the Siamese authorities had been afforded some further time and opportunity either for disavowing Mr. Michell's proceedings or for otherwise expressing their views with regard to his action.

That, meanwhile, both Her Majesty's Minister Resident at Bangkok, who was at that time on the eve of proceeding to Europe on leave of absence, and, subsequently to his departure, Mr. Gould had, as the resources of their own Consular Staff were unfortunately quite inadequate to the emergency, applied to the Siamese Government for the necessary assistance to enable them to enforce the decrees of the Court against the property or, as the case might be, the person of Mr. Michell.

Siamese acknowledge Treaty, but refuse to assist in present case.

That it would be seen, however, that the Siamese Government, while not denying their general obligation to render such assistance when required, had, in this particular case, declined at present to grant it, on the ground that Mr. Michell was under Siamese and not under British Consular jurisdiction.

That a full statement of the arguments by which that contention could, in their judgment, be supported, was stated by the Siamese Government‡ to be in course of preparation for submission to that of Her Majesty at the earliest opportunity; but that, although some time elapsed, no such statement was supplied to your Lordship either by the Siamese Government, through Mr. Gould, or, during his recent visit to this country, by Prince Devawongse direct.

That it appeared to your Lordship that further delay was, in those circumstances, both unnecessary and undesirable, and that your Lordship accordingly, on the 19th of last month, instructed Mr. Gould in the sense of the inclosed despatch (No. 42 of the 19th July).

That in the event, which must at any rate be contemplated, of the Siamese Government still refusing to intervene in the matter, your Lordship would desire to be in a position forthwith to instruct Mr. Gould as to what further steps he should take to enforce the authority of his Court; and that Sir Julian Pauncefote was therefore to request us to favour your Lordship with our opinion as to what course should be pursued by Her Majesty's Government in such a contingency.

As to dispatch of ship of war to Bangkok.

That, with reference to this question, Sir Julian Pauncefote was to invite our particular attention to the terms of Article VII of the Treaty of Friendship and Commerce between Great Britain and Siam of the 18th April, 1885, which, after defining the conditions under which the entry of British ships of war into the River Menam is to be limited, provides that "in the absence of a British ship of war" the Siamese authorities shall "furnish the Consul with a force sufficient to enable him to give effect to his authority over British subjects, and to enforce discipline among British shipping."

But that, although it appeared clear that the Siamese Government were by the terms of that Article under an engagement to furnish the Consul with assistance sufficient to enable him to execute the decrees of his Court, it seemed open to some doubt, whether, in the event of their failure to perform their Treaty obligation in that regard, Her Majesty's Government would be justified in sending a ship of war up the river as far as Bangkok, for the purpose either of landing a boat's crew or otherwise of themselves enabling the Consul to give effect to his authority.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted in that letter, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

Dispatch of ship of war without permission a breach of the Treaty.

That, in our opinion, in the event of the refusal by the Siamese Government to afford Her Majesty's Consular officials the assistance necessary for enforcing the judgments and orders of the British Consular Court against Mr. Michell, on the ground that he is not a British subject, or of their refusal to permit a British ship of war to proceed up the river to Bangkok for the purpose, Her Majesty's Government could not send a ship of war to Bangkok without a breach of Article VII of the Treaty.

Should exercise diplomatic pressure.

If such a refusal should occur, diplomatic pressure should be brought to bear upon the Siamese Government, and they should be asked to give a statement of the reasons on which it is based, and those reasons should receive full consideration before the adoption of serious measures.

Promised explanation a reason for delay.

In this particular case, the fact that the Siamese Government state that they are about to submit to the Foreign Office a full statement of their arguments in support of the view that Mr. Michell is under Siamese and not under British Consular jurisdiction, affords a further reason for postponing any active steps, but we think that unless this statement is, in due course, transmitted, application should be made respecting it.

Cunliffe-Owen divorce suit.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list* relating to a question which had arisen in the course of certain divorce proceedings brought by Mrs. Emma Cunliffe-Owen against her husband, Mr. Fritz Cunliffe-Owen, before the Civil Tribunal for the District of Vevey, in Switzerland.

That both Mr. and Mrs. Cunliffe-Owen were British subjects; that they were married at Vevey on the 22nd November, 1877, and were both domiciled in Switzerland. That the Swiss Law of Divorce, however (like that of marriage), was only applicable to Swiss citizens; and that foreigners, whether domiciled in Switzerland or not, could not obtain a decree of divorce from the Tribunals of that country unless they had previously furnished themselves with an official certificate from the authorities of the country of their nationality; that such a decree would, if granted by the Swiss Tribunal, be recognized as valid by the laws of the nation to which such foreigners belong.

Request for certificate of validity of Swiss decree in England.

That in the present case the Civil Tribunal at Vevey, acting under the direction of the Superior Court of the Canton de Vaud, had declined to proceed to the determination of the suit unless a certificate to the effect indicated above was furnished to them by the competent British authorities.

That it would be remembered that the propriety of authorizing Her Majesty's Minister at Berne to make a general declaration to the Swiss Federal Government, to the effect that a divorce of British subjects domiciled in Great Britain, if granted by a competent Swiss Tribunal upon grounds recognized by British law, would be valid in Great Britain, formed the subject of a reference to ourselves in September of last year, and that we expressed our entire concurrence with the view of the then Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs that it was not desirable to grant the general authority proposed, but that any case which might arise should be considered upon its merits, and the issue of a certificate be authorized only under circumstances in which such certificate was really necessary.

That in the present case it would, however, appear that the parties were bonâ fide domiciled in Switzerland, and that the facts, if proved, were such as would entitle the petitioner to a divorce according to the law of this country.

That Sir T. V. Lister was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether, having regard to the circumstances of that particular case, Her Majesty's Minister at Berne might properly be instructed to grant a certificate, to be annexed to the "Acte de Vérité," that if Judgment of Divorce should be pronounced by the Swiss Tribunals in the suit then pending before them such divorce would be recognized as valid by the law of England.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to report—

Certificate may be granted.

That, having regard to the circumstances of this particular case, Her Majesty's Minister at Berne may properly be instructed to grant the certificate.

Yacoub Levy Stambouli. British protected subject at Damascus.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers* noted in the margin, with reference to the nationality of one Yacoub Levy Stambouli, a person of Jewish extraction residing at Damascus, who had hitherto been considered to be a British subject, and as such entitled to British protection.

* Sir W. White, No. 27, January 17, 1887; Circular to Consuls in Turkey, November 1, 1886 (No. 1901).

1887

That the Ottoman authorities had protested against Her Majesty's Government continuing to accord to Stambouli their protection, and had based such protest upon the ground that he originally obtained recognition at the hands of Her Majesty's Government, as a British subject, by means of fraudulent declarations of untrustworthy persons, and other collusive or fictitious evidence.

That that contention on the part of the Sublime Porte would at present appear to your Lordship to be not entirely without warrant, as it seemed to your Lordship that Stambouli's right to British nationality rested on what were at any rate very dubious grounds.

That, in those circumstances, your Lordship desired to be favoured with our opinion as to whether the evidence contained Sir W. White's despatch No. 27 of the 17th January was such as to satisfy us that the recognition of Stambouli as a British subject was originally obtained by fraud; or whether we thought, upon the other hand, that the evidence was not sufficiently conclusive upon that point; and, in the former case, whether Stambouli should be called upon to vindicate his right to British protection before further action was taken.

That it was conceived that, notwithstanding the fact that he had been in the uninterrupted enjoyment of such protection for a period now extending over thirty years, he would be no longer entitled thereto if it were clearly shown that it was originally obtained by fraud, and that he was, in fact, not a British subject.

That your Lordship would, however, also like to be informed whether, in our judgment, that view was correct or otherwise.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted in that letter, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That if it were clearly shown that British protection was originally obtained by fraud, such protection could be withdrawn.

Protection should be withdrawn if obtained by fraud. Evidence of fraud insufficient; Turks refused to question his status in 1864.

That the documents submitted to us do not, in our opinion, disclose sufficient evidence to prove fraud, and, in the absence of such evidence, and having regard to the circumstance that in 1864—at the time of the receipt of the Police Report—the Representative of the Ottoman Government at Damascus refused to call in question Stambouli's status, though incited to do so by the British Consul, Her Majesty's Government would be justified in declining to withdraw from him their protection, at any rate without calling upon him to support his claim.

My Lord,

Estate of G. Popolani. Claims of residuary legatees against Her Majesty's Government on account of misconduct of official administrator.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list,* with reference to a claim which had been advanced against Her Majesty's Government on behalf of Mme. Lavison and Mr. Albert Wilkinson, as two of the residuary legatees of the late Giovanni Popolani, of Alexandria, in respect of a sum of 48,000 fr., which it was alleged they had been deprived of through the misconduct, in his official capacity, of M. Achille Palmieri while that gentleman was in the service of Her Majesty's Government as Law Secretary to the Consular Court in Egypt, and was also acting under an order of that Court as official administrator of the estate of Giovanni Popolani.

Estate of C. Popolani.

That they also claimed further sums amounting together to upwards of 100,000 fr. on the accounts of the estate of one Constantino Popolani (who died intestate and indebted to the estate of Giovanni Popolani in a sum 340,000 fr.) as rendered by the Alexandria Court on the 18th April, 1862, but that it was only in respect of the sum of 48,000 fr. first mentioned that they were at present endeavouring to hold the Government responsible.

---

* Mr. C. Royle, December 15, 1886; Consul-General Fawcett, No. 24, March 2, 1887.

That in the year 1870 proceedings were taken against Palmieri in the Supreme Court of Constantinople by a Mr. Harvey, acting on behalf of the heirs of Popolani to obtain an account and the decree of that Court for such sum as should be found to be due thereon from Palmieri to the succession.

That the action was not defended by Palmieri, and that, in default of appearance, Judgment was given against him for 48,000 fr. and interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum.

That shortly afterwards Palmieri applied for and obtained a rule nisi for a new trial, but that, on the argument of the rule, on the 18th August, 1870, before the then Consul-General and Judge, it was discharged.

That difficulties appeared, however, to have arisen with regard to executing the Judgment thus obtained against Palmieri; that at any rate it had remained unexecuted to that day; but that the present claimants asserted that they were in no way bound by, or interested in, those proceedings; and that, inasmuch as the money in question was received by Palmieri as an officer of the Court, and without the persons who were interested in its ultimate disposition being in any way parties to the transaction, it was to the British Government (whose servant he was), and not to Palmieri himself, that they looked to replace the missing sums.

That as the facts of the case were involved in some obscurity, Her Majesty's Consul-General at Constantinople was requested to furnish a Report upon it for the information of Her Majesty's Government.

That he had supplied as full details as were available, but that owing to the length of time which had elapsed since the events occurred upon which the present claim was based, and to the fact that most of the documents connected with the case were destroyed by the fire at Alexandria in 1882, and that most of the parties concerned were dead, his task had been attended with considerable difficulty.

That it would appear, judging from Consul-General Fawcett's Report, that the charge against Palmieri was not one of embezzlement, but was rather in the nature of a conspiracy to defraud the estate, which he officially administered, by collusively selling a piece of land to Messrs. Dervier and Co. for 48,000 fr., with a view to its resale by that firm to the Egyptian Government for exactly double the amount, and to a subsequent division (which apparently took place) of the profit attaching to that transaction with Messrs. Dervier and Co. and a person called Lacovitch.

That it was conceived, however, that a Judgment by default obtained against Palmieri seventeen years ago was not such evidence of the fraud now charged against him as would justify Her Majesty's Government in accepting any liability in the matter (even if they should be under any responsibility) in respect of the whole or any part of the 48,000 fr. which was claimed by the residuary legatees of Popolani.

That Sir J. Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, Her Majesty's Government were under any liability to the present claimants in respect of the sum of 48,000 fr., or any part thereof; and that if so, whether the claimants could hold Her Majesty's Government primarily responsible in this or any amount without having first exhausted the assets of Palmieri; or whether such liability would not merely attach to Her Majesty's Government in the event of Palmieri's resources having previously proved insufficient to satisfy the claim.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Her Majesty's Government are not liable in respect of the claims made by the legatees.

That, in our opinion, the facts detailed in the documents submitted do not establish any liability on the part of Her Majesty's Government in respect of the claims put forward by Madame Lavison and Mr. Albert Wilkinson.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received June 8.)

Royal Courts of Justice, June 7, 1887.

My Lord,

Judicial duties at Sophia.

1887

to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, with reference to a proposal which was then under consideration for relieving, as far as possible, the Agent and Consul-General at Sophia of the judicial duties he had to perform.

Proposal that Vice-Consul should hold a separate Court.

That in consequence of the increasing importance and pressure of the political work at the Agency and Consulate-General, it had been suggested that the Vice-Consul appointed to that post might hold a separate Court at Sophia for the disposal of all ordinary judicial business, leaving any exceptionally important cases to be decided, as heretofore, by the Consul-General under the Orders in Council for the Levant.

Question as to holding of Court by more than one commissioned officer in the same district.

That that proposal, however, raised the question as to whether, under section 15 of the Order in Council of the 12th December, 1873, more than one commissioned Consular officer could hold a Consular Court within the same Consular district.

By that section it was provided that every commissioned Consular officer (subject to certain exceptions mentioned) should, "for and in his own Consular district, hold and form a Court."

That all those Courts were styled Provincial Courts; but that there was an important distinction between the powers of a Provincial Court held before a commissioned Consular officer and those of a Provincial Court held before an uncommissioned Consular officer.

That the civil and criminal jurisdiction of the former Courts was defined by sections 31 and 271, and that of the latter by sections 96 and 272 of the Order in Council.

That by paragraph 38 a Provincial Court held before a commissioned Consular officer had concurrent jurisdiction with that of the several Provincial Courts (if any) held before an uncommissioned officer within the same district, and that the latter Courts were bound, by section 272, within seven days after deciding a criminal case, to report the same and transmit the proceedings to the "Superintending Consul"—that was to say, to the Provincial Court held before the commissioned officer for and in that district. That the Order in Council therefore clearly contemplated the existence, in the same Consular district, of one or more Courts of limited jurisdiction held before an "uncommissioned" Consular officer concurrently with, and subservient to, the Court of the commissioned Consular officer who was the Superintending Consul.

But that it was conceived that, notwithstanding the large terms of section 15, it was not intended by the Order in Council that where there were two or more commissioned officers in the same district each of them should hold a separate Provincial Court, for otherwise it would be difficult to decide who would be the Superintending Consul under section 38; and that it did not appear that more than one Consular officer could exercise jurisdiction in the same Provincial Court.

That the only cases in which provision appeared to have been made for more than one Judge sitting in the same Court were those of the Supreme Court at Constantinople (section 10), and the Court in Egypt (section 14).

Questions submitted.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to—

1. Whether under the provisions of the Order in Council more than one Provincial Court could be held before a commissioned Consular officer within the same Consular district;

2. Whether more than one Consular officer could exercise jurisdiction in any Provincial Court;

3. Whether (if the above questions were answered in the negative) it was competent to the Secretary of State to direct that a Provincial Court in and for the district of Sophia should be held before a commissioned Vice-Consul instead of a Consul General; and

4. Whether it was, under any circumstances, legal for the Law Clerk of the Smyrna Consular Court to "hold Courts frequently in petty cases," as described by Consul-General Fawcett in his despatch No. 34 of the 9th April last.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

One Court in each district.

Sittings of Court under two commissioned officers.

Courts under commissioned and non-commissioned officers.

That, in our opinion, under the provisions of the Order in Council, there is to be one Provincial Court in each district before a commissioned Consular officer; but if two commissioned Consular officers are appointed for the same district, each may, unless the Secretary of State has made any order excepting one from acting, lawfully hold a sitting of the Provincial Court. Under clause 38 the Provincial Courts before commissioned Consular officers have concurrent jurisdiction with the Provincial Courts before uncommissioned Consular officers.

Exercise of judicial functions by Law Clerk at Smyrna illegal.

It is not, in our opinion, legal for the Law Clerk of the Smyrna Consular Court to hold Courts and exercise judicial functions, as appears to have been the practice in that Court.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received October 19.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, October 18, 1887.

Estate of Hobart Pasha.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to certain questions which had arisen in the administration of the estate of the late Admiral the Honourable Hobart Pasha in Her Majesty's Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople.

That it appeared from the Memorandum inclosed in the despatch of Sir Henry Fawcett, Her Majesty's Consul-General and Judge at Constantinople, of the 19th ultimo, No. 74, that Hobart Pasha was at the time of his death permanently resident within the Ottoman dominions, and, therefore, within the jurisdiction of Her Majesty's Supreme Consular Court for the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte; but that his death (on the 19th June, 1886) actually took place at Milan, in Italy, where he had gone for the benefit of his health.

Administrator appointed at Constantinople.

That he left a will, of which he appointed his wife sole executrix, but that on the 3rd August, 1886, she renounced probate thereof, and that the Judge of the Supreme Court at Constantinople thereupon appointed Sir George Thomas, Bart., Secretary of the Imperial Ottoman Bank, and the largest creditor of the deceased within the Court's jurisdiction, as administrator of such of his estate as was situate within the said jurisdiction.

Sufficiency of assets in Turkey doubtful.

That it appeared doubtful whether the assets in the Ottoman dominions over which the jurisdiction of the Supreme Consular Court extends would prove sufficient to meet the liabilities within those dominions alone, which were considerable; while there were also liabilities in England, where it was alleged a certain amount of property belonging to the deceased Admiral existed.

Claims of creditors out of jurisdiction of the Consular Court.

That no one had, however, as yet applied for administration in England, and that some English creditors had sent in their claims to Sir George Thomas, the administrator appointed by the Supreme Consular Court; that that gentleman had applied to Sir Henry Fawcett, the Judge of that Court, for direction as to whether he should recognize the claims of English creditors or others out of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Consular Court, and also what steps, if any, he should take to obtain administration in England.

That under these circumstances, Sir Henry Fawcett had, for the guidance of the Court, applied to your Lordship for instructions on the following points, viz.:—

1. Whether the administrator should recognize the claims of English creditors or others out of the jurisdiction of the Court.

2. What steps, if any, could or ought to be taken by him in reference to the obtaining of administration in England.

3. Whether he ought to limit his administration solely to such property as is situate within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Consular Court.

That, in connection with the above questions, Sir Julian Pauncefote was particularly to direct our attention to paragraphs 5 and 91 of the Ottoman Order in Council, 1873, and to paragraph 18 of the Ottoman Order in Council, 1882, which would be found at pp. 4, 28, and 158 of the accompanying collection of Orders in Council for the Levant.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the three questions submitted therein, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Opinion as to English, &c., claims, and administration in England and Turkey.

That, in our opinion, the administrator cannot refuse to recognize, and is bound to the extent of his power to satisfy, claims of English creditors or others out of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Consular Court, and that if he have reason to believe that the deceased has left property in England, he should apply for letters of administration to the Probate Division of the High Court.

For the protection of the administrator, we think that the estate should be administered both in Turkey and in England under the direction of the Court.

We have, &c.

My Lord,

Succession to the property of Antoun Abdul Messih. Appeal against decision of Consular Court.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us certain papers noted in the accompanying list, in connection with an appeal now pending before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council for the purpose of setting aside the decision of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople in the matter of the succession to the property of one Antoun Youssouf Abdul Messih, deceased.

Memorial from the Chaldean Patriarch to the Judicial Committee.

That the case was one of very great importance, both as regards the questions at issue and the amount of property involved; and that the representative of the Chaldean Patriarch at Constantinople, who, under the circumstances more particularly mentioned in that document, conceived his interests to have been injuriously affected, had caused to be transmitted to the Turkish Ambassador in this country, for submission to the Judicial Committee, a Memorial setting out certain matters which he desired to bring to their attention at the hearing of the case.

That that Memorial had been forwarded by Rustem Pasha to your Lordship, with a request that your Lordship would be good enough to see that it reached the Judicial Committee.

That it appeared to your Lordship, however, that the Judicial Committee would refuse to receive, or consider, a Memorial of that kind with reference to an appeal actually pending before them, and that therefore it might be advisable to return the Memorial to Rustem Pasha, with some intimation as to the proper course to be pursued by the Patriarch under the circumstances.

That it seemed doubtful whether the Patriarch was at present a party to the suit, and that, if he were not, it was presumed that the leave of the Judicial Committee would have to be obtained before counsel could appear on his behalf at the hearing of the appeal, and that, in any case, he could only be heard by counsel, and on such points as were material to, and limited by, the actual issue before the Court.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the views above suggested were correct; and that if, in our judgment, the Memorial should not be forwarded to the Judicial Committee, we would be good enough further to advise your Lordship generally as to the terms of the letter which should accompany its return to Rustem Pasha.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

Should return Memorial. Cannot communicate with Committee as to.

That, in our opinion, the views expressed in the letter of Sir Julian Pauncefote of the 1st December, 1887, are correct, and that the Memorial should be returned to Rustem Pasha, with a letter stating that it is not possible for your Lordship to make any communication to the members of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council with respect to an appeal which is at present awaiting their judicial consideration and decision.

Patriarch may apply by counsel for leave to intervene.

It should be added that it is competent for the Chaldean Patriarch to make an application to the Court to be allowed to intervene and be represented upon the argument of the appeal, but that such application must be made, if at all, by counsel duly instructed to appear on the Patriarch's behalf.

Should give no opinion on question.

It should further be stated that your Lordship cannot express any opinion as to the probability of the Court allowing such intervention, this question being one of a purely legal character.

We have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Sir J. Deane to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received January 18.)

Royal Courts of Justice, January 18, 1887.

My Lord,

Seizure by United States' Government of the "Natalie" with guano from the Pedro Cays.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that he was to transmit to us papers relating to the case of the British vessel "Natalie." That that vessel, laden with a cargo of guano from the Pedro Cays, a bank situated some 40 miles to the south of Jamaica, was seized by the United States' authorities at Norfolk, Virginia, for an alleged breach of the United States' Navigation Laws, on the ground that those cays were part of the territory of the United States of America.

That she was, however, subsequently released, and that her owners, Messrs. Elliott and Fanning, who were British subjects resident in Nova Scotia, were now putting forward a claim for compensation, in which they requested the support of Her Majesty's Government.

That it should be mentioned that Messrs. Cordova and Co., the charterers of the "Natalie" and owners of her cargo, originally invoked the assistance of Her Majesty's Government in support of a claim for damages which they, in those capacities, had made upon the United States' Government, but that Her Majesty's Government had declined to afford them support in its prosecution, on the ground that they were American citizens and not British subjects.

That our attention was specially invited to Mr. West's despatch No. 269, Commercial, of the 27th November, 1885, reporting the seizure of the "Natalie," and to Sir E. Hertslet's Memorandum of the 11th December, 1884, on the right of sovereignty claimed by the Crown over the Pedro Cays; and that Sir J. Pauncefote was also further to add that those cays had, as a matter of fact, been in the actual possession of Great Britain for twenty-two years, having been occupied during that time by lessees from the Crown, who had paid royalties to the Crown.

That Sir J. Pauncefote requested that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to (1) whether the right of Great Britain to the possession of the Pedro Cays was in any way open to question; and (2) if not, whether a claim could properly be made by Her Majesty's Government against the Government of the United States on behalf of Messrs. Elliott and Fanning for such an amount as might, on further inquiry, be considered reasonable to compensate them for the seizure and detention of their vessel under the circumstances already detailed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

British right to the Cays unquestionable. Should support claim for compensation.

That, upon the facts laid before us, the right of Great Britain to the possession of the Pedro Cays is not, in our opinion, open to question, and that Her Majesty's Government can properly sustain the claim of Messrs. Elliott and Fanning against the United States' Government in respect of the wrongful seizure and detention of the "Natalie."

First ask for grounds of United States' claim to the Cays.

But before putting forward the claims for compensation made by the owners of the "Natalie," we respectfully suggest that the United States' Government should be asked to state on what grounds they consider the Guano Islands, Pedro Cays, and Morant Cays to appertain to the United States, those islands having been taken possession of by Her Majesty's Government in 1862 and 1863.

Imprisonment in United States of seamen condemned by British Naval or Consular Courts.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list,* relative to the question whether a British merchant-seaman sentenced to a term of imprisonment by a Naval or Consular Court of Her Majesty could be imprisoned, under the Act of Congress of the United States of the 8th August, 1846, chapter 105, in a gaol of the United States.

Decision that Act of Congress applies only to countries having Treaties similar to Prussian.

That the Senior Judge of the San Francisco Court (Judge Hoffman) had decided that the Act in question was only intended to apply to those nations with whom the United States had Treaties similar to that with Prussia of the 1st May, 1828, to which particular reference was made therein, and that he refused to order a British seaman to be received into a United States' gaol on the ground that in the case of Great Britain and the United States there was no such similar Treaty in existence.

That Her Majesty's Minister at Washington was instructed to communicate with their Department of State with the object of ascertaining the views of the United States' Government upon the point, but that that Government had, for the reasons mentioned in Mr. Bayard's letter of the 3rd March, declined to express any opinion upon the decision.

That the question was raised, at the instance of the Rear-Admiral Commanding-in-chief on the Pacific Station, by the Board of Trade in their letter to the Foreign Office of the 28th January last, in which they suggested it they should be referred to the Law Officers of the Crown for their opinion.

That, in those circumstances, Sir T. V. Lister was to request that we would take the papers transmitted therewith into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the interpretation put upon the Act of Congress by Judge Hoffman was correct or otherwise.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Above interpretation correct.

That, in our opinion, the interpretation placed upon the Act of Congress by Judge Hoffman is correct.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received August 20.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, August 20, 1887.

Seizure of British seal schooners in Behring's Sea.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to the seizure of three British Columbian seal schooners, named respectively the "Thornton," the "Carolina," and the "Onward," by the United States' Revenue cruizer the "Corwin," in Behring's Sea on the 1st August of last year, and the subsequent trial, conviction, and sentence to fine and imprisonment of the respective masters of those schooners by the United States' Tribunals for killing fur-bearing animals in contravention of United States' Statute Law, in waters, as was alleged, within American jurisdiction.

That the circumstances attending the seizure of those three vessels, as well as the grounds upon which, as was understood, the proceedings of the Captain of the "Corwin" were justified by the United States' Government, were to be found very clearly set forth in the late Earl of Iddesleigh's despatch to Her Majesty's Minister at Washington of the 30th October, 1886 (see Confidential Print, Part I, p. 24), in the extract from the "Daily British Colonist," Victoria, of the 7th October, 1886, which formed the Inclosure in Mr. Evan Macgregor's letter to Sir J. Pauncefote of the 4th November, 1886 (see Confidential Print, Part I, pp. 28 and 29), and in the Confidential Foreign Office Memorandum of the 19th October, 1886, on the right of British Colonial vessels to fish for seals in the Behring's Sea.

United States' claim to jurisdiction over the whole of Behring's Sea.

That a Map indicating the extent of the Behring's Sea over which the claim of the United States' Government to jurisdiction was believed to extend, and the exact positions of the schooners at the time of their seizure, would be found opposite p. 5 of the last-mentioned Memorandum, in which were also embodied (at p. 5) the material portions of the Treaty of the 30th March, 1867, by which Russia purported to cede the Territory of Alaska and certain of the waters of the Behring's Sea, therein more particularly defined, to the United States.

That the text of the United States' Statute (Public, No. 120, of the 1st July, 1870), by virtue of the provisions of which the seizure of the schooners and the punishment of their respective masters purports to have been effected, was to be found on pp. 14 and 15 of the Confidential Print, Part I, already referred to.

That it would be seen that, at the time of the seizures in question, none of the three schooners was at a distance of less than 50 miles from the nearest land, and that it would be seen, therefore, that any forcible interference with them, under such circumstances, by a ship of war of a foreign nation, was, as having taken place upon the high seas, entirely without warrant or justification.

under their Treaty with Russia of 1867.

That the Commander of the "Corwin," however, justified his action on the ground, in which the American Government appeared to acquiesce, that the whole of the Behring's Sea, which is within the boundaries set forth in the Ist Article of the Treaty of the 30th March, 1867, and which extends to a distance of several hundreds of miles to the east of the westerly boundary of Alaska, was comprised within American territorial waters, and that that view was also maintained by the Judge of the United States' District Court for Alaska, before whom the case was heard, and formed the principal ground upon which his Judgment was based.

That it was not clear whether any appeal against the decision of the District Court had been lodged by the owners or masters of the three British schooners, or either of them, nor was it known whether such appeal, if not already instituted, was still open to them.

But that it appeared that an action was pending at the suit of the owners of certain American vessels, which were seized under similar circumstances, against the Commander of the "Corwin," and that that action was being defended by the American Government.

That meanwhile, without prejudice to, or conclusion of, any of the questions involved, orders had been issued by the President of the United States for the discontinuance of all pending proceedings in the cases of the British schooners referred to, and the release of all persons connected therewith.

That repeated protests had been from time to time addressed by Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, acting on instructions from the Secretary of State, to the United States' Government in respect of the seizures in question, but that that Government had hitherto, and apparently designedly, abstained from either disavowing or entering upon a justification of the action of the "Corwin."

That the questions at issue had, it was thought, an indirect but somewhat important bearing upon the controversy now pending between the United States and this country with respect to the Canadian fisheries, and that it was therefore considered particularly desirable to obtain, without further delay, some succinct declaration from the United States' Government as to the position which they intended to take up upon them.

That your Lordship was therefore disposed, having regard to that consideration, and to the unreasonable delay in dealing with the matter which had already taken place on the part of the United States, at once to advance a general claim for compensation on behalf of the owners and masters of those three vessels, should we consider that grounds of law exist upon which such a demand could clearly be supported.

That with respect to the claim to sovereignty over certain of the waters of the Behring's Sea beyond the 3-mile limit, which it was gathered that the United States were now disposed to advance in reliance upon the terms of the Treaty of 1867, it appeared in the first place open to doubt, having regard to the wording of the Treaty itself, whether Russia either intended or purported to make any such grant.

But that even if, on the proper construction of that Treaty, it must be held that Russia did purport to cede those waters to the United States of America, the further question whether she had any right so to cede them would still remain.

That the possession of any such right would appear to be quite repugnant to the general doctrines of international law, while the attempts of Russia in the early part of this century to arrogate to herself such rights, and to treat the whole of the Behring's Sea and Straits as mare clausum, were always most strenuously resisted, not only by this country, but also by the United States.

That it was conceived, therefore, that the grant by Treaty of any such general jurisdiction would, if actually made, be entirely ultra vires in so far as the subjects or vessels of Powers other than the Contracting Parties to such Treaty were concerned, and that, even assuming that a grant of such jurisdiction by Russia to the United States of America might possibly be binding on Russian subjects and vessels within the specified limits, it could under no circumstances extend to the subjects and ships of Great Britain or of any other third Power not a party to that Treaty without the express consent of such third Power.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the above views were correct, and whether the case was one in which a demand for compensation might properly be made without further delay. That, in so doing, Sir Philip Currie was also to ask us to be good enough to add any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We also have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of Sir Philip Currie's notes of the 13th and 15th instant, inclosing some additional papers* which your Lordship desired us to take into consideration, with the papers already before us, in connection with the seizure by the American authorities of British Columbian vessels engaged in seal-fishing in the Behring's Sea.

* To Sir L. West, Nos. 193 and 194; Sir L. West, No. 28 (Telegraphic), August 12; ditto, No. 225 August 4, 1887.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken all the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

Seizure unwarranted. May claim compensation.

That, in our opinion, for the reasons stated in Sir Philip Currie's letter, the seizure of the vessels in question was entirely unwarranted, and that a claim for compensation may properly be made and pressed without further delay.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received September 9.)

[In reply to the following reference, the Law Officers reported as below on the 8th September, 1887:—]

Foreign Office, September 8, 1887.

Gentlemen,

Seizure of the "l'Envieuse" and imprisonment of crew.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquis of Salisbury, the papers, as marked in the margin,* reporting the seizure and detention by the Venezuelan authorities at Guïria of the British flat "l'Envieuse," and the imprisonment of her captain and crew.

The vessel belongs to a well-known firm in Trinidad, and was conveying monthly provisions to their estate on the coast of the Colony when she was driven by stress of weather into Venezuelan waters, where she anchored to await the turn of the tide.

Vessel condemned. Case under appeal.

She was then seized by Custom-house officials, and her crew imprisoned at Guïria. The local Court condemned the vessel and crew, and the case is under appeal. Full particulars of the incident are given in the despatch of the Governor of Trinidad, and in the letter from Mr. Tripp to Mr. Kimber, M.P.

I am to inclose, for convenience of reference, the accompanying Report by the Law Officers of the Crown on the cases of the "Henrietta" and "Josephine,"† referred to in the despatch from the Governor of Trinidad, and I am to request you to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion at your earliest convenience whether, in the event of the vessel and the seamen belonging to her not being released by the Court of Appeal, the case is such as to justify instructions being given to the Commander of Her Majesty's ship "Comus," now at Trinidad, to demand the immediate release of the vessel and crew, and in case of refusal, to resort to reprisals or other forcible measures to obtain reparation.

I am, &c.

That we are clearly of opinion that the facts of the case, as stated in the papers before us, justify Her Majesty's Government in giving instructions to the Commander of Her Majesty's ship "Comus" to demand the immediate release of the "l'Envieuse" and her crew and cargo, and, in case of refusal, to resort to reprisals or other forcible measures to obtain reparation.

My Lord,

Claim of the Venezuela-Panamá Gold Mining Company for loss caused by the President's action.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 14th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers, noted in the accompanying list,[*] with reference to an application which had been made to your Lordship by the Venezuela-Panamá Gold Mine Company (Limited) for the assistance of Her Majesty's Government in procuring the restitution of a valuable property in Venezuela, of which they alleged themselves to have been despoiled by the arbitrary and illegal action of General Guzman Blanco, the President of the Venezuelan Republic.

That the circumstances under which the application was made and justified, were concisely set forth in the Company's letter of the 31st October, 1887; and that copies of various documents in its support would be found in the Appendix thereto.

That Sir T. V. Lister was also to call our particular attention, as being in some measure a confirmation of the allegation of the Company from an independent and trustworthy official source, to the despatch of Mr. F. St. John, Her Majesty's Minister at Carácas, of the 6th instant.

That on the 20th February the Venezuelan Government suspended diplomatic relations with that of Her Majesty, in consequence of the attitude maintained by the latter with regard to the controversy then, as now, pending between the two Governments respecting the boundary of British Guiana.

That Her Majesty's Representative at Carácas was in consequence directed to return to this country, and that, by the consent of the German Imperial Government, the protection of British interests and property in Venezuela was, pending the resumption of relations between that Republic and Great Britain, intrusted to the German Minister-Resident at that city.

That Sir T. V. Lister was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our Opinion as to whether such a primâ facie case had been established as called for the intervention of Her Majesty's Government, and, if so, whether they would be justified, under the circumstances, in notifying to the Venezuelan Government, through the German Minister at Carácas, that Her Majesty's Government held them responsible for the losses and injuries which the Company might sustain by reason of the proceedings complained of, and reserved all rights in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Legal question dealt with by Courts. No ground for intervention.

That in our opinion, as the legal questions arising in this matter have been considered and dealt with by Courts of competent jurisdiction, there is not, in the absence of sufficient evidence of corruption or misconduct on the part of such Courts, any ground for diplomatic intervention.

We have, &c.

No. 1.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received February 11.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, February 10, 1888.

Outrages committed by G. S. Burgess, of the "Nupe," on the Benué River.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 14th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin* with reference to the case of George Slater Burgess, a British subject, lately in the service of the Royal Niger Company, Chartered and Limited.

That it would be seen from the accompanying papers that Burgess, while actually serving in the Company's employ as mate of one of their steamers upon the River Benué, was undoubtedly guilty (as he had, indeed, himself admitted) of acts of revolting barbarity towards various native servants of the Company.

Difficulties in way of punishing Burgess.

That the greater part, if not all, of those inhuman outrages appeared to have been committed on board the steamer "Nupe," but that it appeared that that steamer was not registered under sections 17–19 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," as a "British ship," and that the question, therefore, arose whether the case came within section 11 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1867," which provided that "if any British subject commits any crime or offence on board any British ship, or on board any foreign ship to which he does not belong, any Court of Justice in Her Majesty's dominions which would have had cognizance of such crime or offence, if committed on board a British ship within the limits of the ordinary jurisdiction of such Court, shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the case as if the said crime or offence had been committed as last aforesaid."

That, should the offences in question not be deemed to be justiciable under the last-quoted section, it was anticipated that considerable difficulty might be experienced, as well on the part of Her Majesty's Government as on that of the Company themselves, in punishing them adequately, or it might be at all.

That further particulars as to the nature of all the offences referred to, and the circumstances attending their commission, would be found in Sir Taubman Goldie's letter (and inclosures) of the 29th November last, from which it would also be seen that although Buba-n-Gidda, the place in the vicinity of which the outrages were committed, was originally comprised within those territorial limits over which, by the combined operation of Treaty grants from the native Chiefs and the permission of Her Majesty's Government the Company might at one time have exercised jurisdiction, they had now abandoned such jurisdiction by withdrawing it northwards to the vicinity of Yola, in accordance with the spirit of the Agreement between Germany and Great Britain for the delimitation of the respective spheres of influence of those two Powers in Central Africa.

That in the accompanying Map, which had been prepared for convenience of reference, Buba-n-Gidda was represented by a red cross, and was, as would be seen, actually well within the limits of the German sphere, as denoted by the green line of demarcation between the two spheres of influence.

That at present the German Government had, as a matter of fact, taken no steps of any kind to assert their predominance or to establish their jurisdiction in that region; but that it appeared to your Lordship that even under other circumstances the exercise of jurisdiction over Burgess as a British subject in respect of offences committed within the German sphere of influence by any British Tribunal situated without that sphere, and otherwise competent to entertain the question, would, having regard to the meaning and intention of the Agreement between Great Britain and Germany, neither constitute an interference with German influence within their sphere, nor be resented as such by the German Government.

That as the offences in question did not amount to murder or manslaughter they could not be tried by any Colonial Court, nor in the United Kingdom, nor by Commission under 57 George III, cap. 53, and that the only question remaining for consideration on this branch of the case would appear to be whether Burgess was justiciable under the provisions of the West Africa Order in Council of the 26th March, 1885.

That by Article I of that Order, "Her Majesty has power and jurisdiction in those parts of West Africa situate west of the 25th meridian of east longitude, south of the 30th parallel of north latitude, and north of the 25th parallel of south latitude," except in so far as regards "any place for the time being comprised within the limits of the ordinary local jurisdiction of the Courts of any Colony, Settlement, or Possession of Her Majesty, or of any other non-African Power, and except the territories and territorial waters of Morocco and Liberia."

That the whole of the territories represented in the accompanying Map were within the meridian and parallels prescribed, while Buba-n-Gidda was not comprised within the excepted limits of the ordinary local jurisdiction of any of the Courts mentioned.

That by Article III of the same Order all powers and jurisdiction thereunder were vested in the Consular Courts thereby constituted, which Courts could, however, only be held and formed by those Consuls-General, Consuls, or Vice-Consuls (or persons acting in any such capacities by the authority of the Secretary of State) to whom districts had been assigned, in and for such districts, and at such places within such districts, and subject to such other limitations or restrictions as the Secretary of State might, by any general or particular instructions, from time to time direct.

That if Buba-n-Gidda were at present within the limits of any district thus assigned to one of Her Majesty's Consuls, it must be within that of Consul Hewett, whose district comprised "the Island of Fernando Po, and those territories on the West Coast of Africa comprised within the Bights of Benin and Biafra, and lying between Cape St. Paul's on the west and St. John to the east, or in the rivers or water communications lying between the two capes in question so far inland as British trading settlements or trading operations extend," but that as would be probably seen from the letter of the Niger Company of the 4th January, the facts with respect to any British trading operations or trading settlements at or in the vicinity of Buba-n-Gidda appeared scarcely such as to bring that place within the definition contained in the terms of Consul Hewett's Commission.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion—

1. As to whether, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, and more particularly to the fact that the "Nupe" was not registered as a British ship under section 17-19 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," Burgess was justiciable in respect of such of the offences mentioned as were committed on board that vessel under section 11 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1867," "by any Court of Justice in Her Majesty's dominions."

2. Whether Buba-n-Gidda was at present within the limits of the district assigned to Consul Hewett by the Secretary of State, and, if so, whether the Consul had jurisdiction to try Burgess under the provisions of the West Africa Order in Council, 1885.

3. Whether if Buba-n-Gidda were not within the limits of Consul Hewett's district as at present defined the Secretary of State, by assigning to that or some other Consul a district within which Buba-n-Gidda should be clearly comprised, could render such Consul competent to try Burgess for offences committed at Buba-n-Gidda before that place formed part of his district.

4. Whether, if otherwise practicable, the exercise of jurisdiction over Burgess by Her Majesty s Consul could properly be deemed to be an interference with German influence within the meaning of the arrangement between England and Germany, which was come to in August 1886, relative to their respective spheres of action in the Gulf of Guinea.

5. Whether failing, or in preference to, any of the methods indicated in the preceding questions, we could suggest to your Lordship any, and if so what, other means of effectually bringing Burgess to justice.

---

Burgess justiciable under "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1867."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, Burgess can be tried under section 11 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1867," by any Court of Justice in Her Majesty's dominions which would have had cognizance of the offences committed by him if they had been committed within the limits of the ordinary jurisdiction of such Court.

The non-registration of the "Nupe" does not affect British jurisdiction.

The greater part of the offences were committed on board the "Nupe;" she was a British ship within the meaning of subsection 3 of section 18 of the Act of 1854, and the fact that she was not registered under section 19 of that Act does not prevent the Court having jurisdiction in respect of offences committed on board such ship. (See section 106 of the Act of 1854.)

The point was decided in the case of the "Queen v. Seberg," L.R., 1 C.C.R., 264 and 39 L.J., M. c. 133.

In the view we take the other questions become immaterial.

Royal Courts of Justice, March 23, 1888.

My Lord,

Deposition and removal of Ja Ja, and his ultimate destination.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list,* with reference to the deposition and removal of King Ja Ja from Opobo, within Her Majesty's West African Protectorate, to Accra, in the Gold Coast Colony, where he now remained in custody awaiting the further decision of Her Majesty's Government respecting his ultimate destination.

That in 1884 King Ja Ja, in common with other West African Chiefs, accepted British protection for himself and his dominions, which were situate around the mouth of the Opobo River, and entered into Treaty obligations with Her Majesty, which he had since violated; and that in consequence of his utter disregard of the repeated and severe admonitions and fines which were administered to him by Her Majesty's Government, it became at last necessary, in the interests of the development of the trade and good government of the Opobo River, to remove him altogether from that district.

That accordingly Her Majesty's ship "Goshawk" was, in September of last year, ordered to Opobo for the purpose of removing him, and that he was conveyed on board that vessel to Bonny, where, under the charge of Vice-Consul Johnston, he was transferred to the steam-ship "Calabar," and taken to Accra, at which latter place he was given into the custody of the Government of the Gold Coast Colony.

That the Admiral commanding-in-chief upon the West African Station (Rear-Admiral Sir Walter Hunt-Grubbe, K.C.B.) was directed to hold an inquiry into the various charges alleged against Ja Ja, and arrived at Accra for that purpose on the 27th November last.

That a formal inquiry, at which Ja Ja was not only heard personally, but had the assistance of a local solicitor, was held on the 29th and following days, and that on the 1st December Sir Walter Hunt-Grubbe announced his decision to Ja Ja by letter (Inclosure 1 in Acting Consul Johnston's despatch of the 2nd December, 1887).

That it would be seen that it had been decided not only that Ja Ja could not be permitted to return to Opobo, but that he should be exiled, for a period of not less than five years, to some remote possession of Her Majesty.

That the following places were originally submitted to Ja Ja's choice by Sir Walter Hunt-Grubbe, viz., Ascension, St. Helena, Cape Colony, or one of the West India Islands.

That the Colonial Office, however, entertained objections to the Cape and to Ascension (see Colonial Office, 16th February, 1888), while it also appeared that St. Helena was, on Ja Ja's own account, unsuitable for the purpose (see Acting Consul Johnston's despatch of the 2nd December, 1887).

That, at the same time, Ja Ja's continued detention at Accra, although legalized by the inclosed Ordinance of the Gold Coast Colony of the 6th October, 1887, was very undesirable, and that it was considered advisable to deport him to some suitable island in the West Indian Archipelago with as little further delay as possible.

That it was conceived that Ja Ja's custody on board ship, on the voyage necessary to transfer him to his next place of detention, would be legally warranted as an act of State, and that, as he was a foreigner and not a British subject, any right of action which he might in the latter case have possessed would, as was held in the leading case on this subject of Buron v. Denman (2 Exchequer Reports, 167), be merged in the international rights of the question.

That before any further action was taken in the matter, however, your Lordship desired to be favoured with our opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified in at once proceeding, in accordance with the decision of the Court of Inquiry, to deport Ja Ja to one of the West India Islands, or whether, having regard to any legal questions which might possibly arise, it was advisable that any other, and, if so, what, steps should previously be taken.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was therefore to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted in that letter, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

His deportation to West Indies justifiable; but a local Ordinance for his detention necessary. His custody on board ship justifiable.

That, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government will be justified in at once proceeding to deport Ja Ja to one of the West India Islands. It will, in that case, be necessary that a local Ordinance should provide for his detention. His being kept in custody on board ship on the voyage would be warranted as an act of State.

The Law Officers, subsequently to their Report of the 23rd March, wrote the subjoined opinion on the further question raised in the following Minute, which was submitted to them personally by Sir J. Fergusson at the House of Commons.

Removal of Ja Ja.

Lord Salisbury,

IN anticipation of the discussion of the case of Ja Ja, I think that your direction is necessary in respect of the ground on which the legality of his deportation is to be maintained.

The Law Officers have held it to be legal on the grounds of Buron v. Denman. In that case a British naval officer destroyed the barracoons and carried off the property of a Spaniard engaged in the Slave Trade within a native territory, with the Chief of which we had made a Treaty to abolish that trade.

The Court gave Judgment for the Captain, on the ground that his act was one of State, as having been subsequently ratified by Her Majesty's Ministers. The Crown was therefore responsible.

Now, the authority which Mr. Johnston acted on was erroneous, and as your telegram approving of his previous action is dated on the same day as his asking permission to remove Ja Ja, the 12th September, it may be questioned and cannot be declared to have been of that character; and you have never approved the act of removal, though you have said that you "consider it expedient that Ja Ja should, for the present, be detained at Accra."

Shall it be said in debate that you have ratified the act of removal? Of course, that of detention is provided for by local act, while his removal to any other place would be an act of State, being done by your orders.

The voluntary nature of Ja Ja's departure from Opobo is somewhat doubtful.

J. F.

Foreign Office, April 6, 1888.

Can be justified as an act of State.

Should the question arise in debate, and it become necessary to defend the removal of Ja Ja from Opobo, the steps taken can only be justified by ratifying the conduct of Mr. Johnston as an act of State.

My Lord,

Portuguese bombardment of Minengani. Claims of British Indian subjects.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to the claims of certain British Indian traders settled at Minengani, on the East African Coast, to compensation from the Portuguese Government in respect of the sudden bombardment and subsequent burning of that Settlement on the 18th February, 1887, and subsequent days.

That the events immediately preceding the bombardment of Minengani and the circumstances with which it was accompanied were concisely set forth in the Foreign Office Memorandum of the 18th July, 1887. That a print of the correspondence, together with a list thereof, was also annexed, and that our attention was specially called to the Petition of the British Indian mercantile community (Inclosure No. 2 in Acting Consul-General Holmwood's No. 55 of the 31st March, 1887), and also to the documents numbered 4, 6, and 8 respectively in the list, which contained the various accounts which had been given of the bombardment.

That it would be seen that the town of Minengani was inhabited solely by Indian traders enjoying British protection, and that notwithstanding that the Commander of the Portuguese war-vessels was apparently apprised of that fact, and although no resistance was offered by the inhabitants to his peaceable entry into the town, it was nevertheless subjected to what under the circumstances would seem to have been an unnecessary and wanton bombardment, whereby much British property was entirely destroyed and great sufferings and privations inflicted upon a number of inoffensive British Indian traders.

That the question now arose whether Her Majesty's Government was justified in calling upon that of Portugal to make adequate compensation to the sufferers for the loss and injury inflicted upon them, and that Sir Julian Pauncefote was therefore to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on that point and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

1888

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Demand for compensation not justified.

That in our opinion Her Majesty's Government would not be justified in making a demand upon Portugal for compensation for the loss and injury caused by the bombardment. It appears that notification was given to the British subjects of the intention to bombard. We think, however, that the difficulty of complying with such notice, and the fact that during the whole of the proceedings no real opposition appears to have been made to the seizure of the town by the Portuguese, might be made the ground of friendly remonstrance with the Portuguese Government, asking their consideration of the losses sustained by British subjects.

Might make a friendly remonstrance.

No. 5.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Knutsford.—(Communicated to Foreign Office in Colonial Office Letter of June 20.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, June 12, 1888.

Right of South African Republic, under Convention of 1884, to exempt from duties goods carried by Railway Company.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bramston's letter of the 5th April last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to inform us that questions had arisen upon the construction to be placed on certain Articles of the Convention of London concluded with the South African Republic in 1884, and as to the right of the Government of that State to grant to a Railway Company exemption from customs duty on goods imported into the Republic on the railway which was to be constructed by the Company in question under Concession from the Republican Government.

That Mr. Bramston was to inclose, for our consideration, the undermentioned documents bearing on the question, viz.:—

1. A despatch from Her Majesty's High Commissioner in South Africa, inclosing copies of correspondence on the subject, and the opinion of counsel at Cape Town, including the Attorney-General of the Cape Colony.
2. A translation of the Articles of the Concession granted by the Government of the South African Republic to the Netherlands South African Railway.
3. Copies of correspondence between the President of the South African Republic and Sir Donald Currie, K.C.M.G., M.P.
4. The London Convention of 1884 with the South African Republic. Treaty No. 735.
5. Map of South Africa showing the relative positions of Delagoa Bay, the South African Republic, and the British Colonies referred to in the London Convention.

Questions as to grant of exemption;

That it would be seen that by the XIIIth Article of the London Convention the Government of the South African Republic bound itself not to impose other or higher customs duties on any article imported from any part of Her Majesty's dominions than might be imposed on similar articles coming from any other place or country. That Mr. Bramston was to observe that that clause (which might be described as a "most-favoured-nation clause") was similar in effect to that contained in numerous other Treaties and Conventions made by Her Majesty's Government with foreign Powers.

That, since the date of that Convention, a Concession had been granted by the Government of the South African Republic to the Company known as the "Netherlands South African Railway Company," of which the 39th Article ran as follows in the translation given by the State Secretary of the South African Republic in his letter of the 6th January last: "For all goods, inclusive of cattle carried by the Company over the railway for third parties, freedom from import and export duties is allowed as an exclusive privilege granted to it by the Government of the South African Republic."

That it had been argued that that Article, if carried into effect, would be an infringement of the Convention of London, and that that contention had received the support of the Attorney-General of the Cape Colony, and of Mr. W. P. Schreiner, Legal Adviser to the High Commissioner (copies of whose opinions were inclosed), mainly on the ground that the "most-favoured-nation clause" necessarily precluded the grant of exclusive fiscal privileges to goods entering by a particular route, if such privileges had indirectly the effect of subjecting imports coming originally from any part of Her Majesty's dominions by other routes to other or higher duties than foreign goods imported by the favoured route.

That the Government of the South African Republic had, however, contended that the Concession merely favoured one mode of transport above others, without intending to make any distinction between the country of origin of the goods; and that the XIIIth Clause of the London Convention had no reference to such an arrangement.

That the various arguments in support of those contentions were fully set forth in the inclosed correspondence and opinions, and that your Lordship need only remind us that the inland position of the South African Republic rendered it necessary that imports originating from this country should pass through other territories, either those of British possessions, such as the Cape Colony and Natal, or those of independent States, such as the Orange Free State and Portugal.

That the Portuguese territory of Delagoa Bay, or Lorenço Marques, being contiguous to the territory of the South African Republic at the point where the railway entered the Republic, it was the view of Sir Hercules Robinson and his advisers that goods imported by the railway were imported from Portuguese territory within the meaning of the London Convention.

and as to power of Company to differentiate its charges.

That a further question had, however, as we should perceive, been raised in the correspondence between Sir Donald Currie and the President of the South African Republic, a printed copy of which was inclosed.

That, in his concluding letter, Sir Donald Currie suggested that, notwithstanding the provisions of clauses 17 and 19 of the Concession, the Railway Company could, without breach of those stipulations, frame its tariff of rates so as to create a practical preference in favour of the products of one country over those of others, as well as of one class of goods over others.

That the point might not become one of direct practical importance, but that it appeared to your Lordship that the exact powers of the Company under the Concession should be ascertained.

That Mr. Bramston was accordingly to request that we would inform your Lordship whether, in our opinion, the terms of the 39th Article of the Concession granted to the Netherlands South African Railway Company constituted an infringement of Clause XIII of the London Convention of 1884.

And whether, in our opinion, the Railway Company had power, under the Concession, to differentiate in its charges for carriage—

1. Between different classes of goods;
2. Between goods imported by different importers; and
3. Between goods originating from different countries respectively.

And supposing any such differential rates to be imposed and authorized by the Government Commissioner of the South African Republic, under Article 17, whether that would amount to an infringement of Clause XIII of the London Convention.

That Mr. Bramston was also to request that we would favour your Lordship with any observations upon the matter generally that might appear to us desirable.

We are also honoured with a further letter from Mr. Bramston, dated the 5th April, 1888, with reference to the above matter, and stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us copies of correspondence between the Colonial Office and the Foreign Office, to which Department, as we should perceive, the case sent to us was submitted in draft.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands have the honour to report—

Conditions under which Concession is a breach of the Convention.

That we are not prepared to say that the grant of a Concession, the character and objects of which are matters of controversy, can be said to be a breach of the XIIIth Article of the London Convention of 1884; but if, in fact, goods which enter the Transvaal from any part of the adjacent dominions of Her Majesty are subjected to duties from which goods imported by the railway are free, that, in our opinion, constitutes a breach of the Article.

Concurrence of Republican Government necessary for differentiating duties; this a breach of the Treaty.

We are further of opinion that the Company is not empowered by the terms of the Concession to establish differential charges without the concurrence of the Government of the South African Republic, and that if that Government were to authorize any differential rates between goods originating from different countries, to the prejudice of Great Britain, such action would constitute a breach of the XIIIth Article of the London Convention.

We are, &c.

Petition of the British East African Company for a Charter.

That the documents relating to the Petition were transmitted with Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter, and marked (A) to (M).

That document (A) contained the Petition, the Agreement of the founders of the Company, and a draft Charter prepared by Mr. R. S. Wright, as originally lodged at the Privy Council Office in May last.

That document (B) contained a letter from the Company, stating that the draft Charter originally lodged at the Privy Council Office had been amended.

That document (C) was a letter from the Privy Council Office, transmitting the amended draft Charter.

Amendment proposed as to "mortmain" clause.

That document (M) was a further letter from the Privy Council Office, forwarding a suggestion made by the Colonial Office with regard to an amendment of clause 23.

That document (L) contained a copy of the original draft Charter, with the amendments first introduced therein printed in italics, and the amendment referred to in the preceding paragraph inserted in manuscript.

That the remaining documents comprised copies of the Charters granted to the British North Borneo Company in 1881, and to the Royal Niger Company in 1886, together with various Reports of the Law Officers of the Crown in relation thereto.

That the draft Charter, as amended, followed generally the precedents of the Charters above referred to.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the amended draft Charter, inclosed in the letter of the Privy Council Office (document C), might properly be submitted to the Queen for Her Majesty's gracious approval, or whether any, and, if so, what, modifications should previously be introduced therein.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Approve Charter as amended in clause 23 (sub-section xiv): "Mortmain."

Sir, House of Lords, August 3, 1888.

Proposed Charter for the British East African Company.

Difficulties felt by the Lord Chancellor as to clause granting powers in mortmain.

I AM directed by the Lord Chancellor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 30th ultimo, and the inclosed draft of a Charter proposed to be granted to the Imperial British East Africa Company, and to say that his Lordship feels some difficulty about clause 23 (xiv), which gives unlimited powers in mortmain without licence, and desires, before approving the draft, to know whether the point has received the consideration of the Lord President.

The Lord Chancellor has usually had his attention called to cases where large amounts have been stated as the limit in mortmain, and special reasons have been required before such amounts have been allowed; but in this case there appears to be no limit at all; also, it will be recollected that on a recent occasion the Law Officers stated objections to the inclusion of a licence to hold in mortmain in the Charter itself; those objections did not then prevail, but in this case the Charter purports to dispense altogether with any licence or authority.

Proposed Charter for the British East African Company.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin,* relating to the draft Charter submitted by Mr. Mackinnon for the incorporation of the Imperial British East African Company, on which we reported to your Lordship on the 25th ultimo.

That it would be seen from the inclosure in the Council Office letter that the Lord Chancellor felt some difficulty about clause 23 (xiv), which gave unlimited powers in mortmain without licence.

Lord Chancellor's difficulty as to "mortmain" clause.

That it was very important that the point should be decided in time to enable the Lord President of the Council to submit the draft Charter for the Royal Assent at the Council to be held on the 10th instant; and that Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship, at our earliest possible convenience, with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to the Lord Chancellor, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the point raised by his Lordship.

---

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Reasons why clause as to licence,

That with regard to the second of the two matters mentioned in the letter of the Lord Chancellor of the 3rd August, 1888, as to the insertion in the Charter of a licence in mortmain, we would venture to observe that the question we raised on a recent occasion was as to the necessity of the insertion of a licence to a limited amount in the Charter of Incorporation, on the ground that the Company could obtain a licence when required, but our attention being called to several instances in which such a licence had been inserted, the previous practice was followed.

and limit of amount to be held in mortmain,

Upon the first matter we considered that, having regard to the nature of the Company and its business, a limit of amount was scarcely applicable, and that the words, "convenient for carrying on the management of the Company," were a sufficient limitation of the purposes for which land was to be held.

We would call attention to the fact that trading Companies registered under "The Companies Act," 1862, &c., other than those for the promotion of art and science, have an unrestricted power of holding lands without licence.

should stand as settled.

Under the circumstances we think that paragraph (xiv) of Article 23 should stand as settled by us.

Sentence on G. A. Reece for wounding natives. Petition as to.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin† relating to the Petition of a Mr. G. A. Reece to Her Majesty's Privy Council for leave to appeal against a sentence passed upon him by Her Majesty's Consular Court at Benin.

That an account of the case was given in Mr. Acting Consul Johnston's despatch No. 11 of the 9th March last.

Offence.

That Reece was a Barbados negro trading in that locality, and that while resorting to the forbidden practice of "chopping," a local term which meant recouping bad debts by seizing goods belonging to any native, he fired at some canoes and wounded some natives, for which he was brought to trial before the Acting Consul sitting judicially with Assessors under the West Africa Order in Council, 1885.

Sentence.

That the sentence of the Court was that he should be deported for ten years.*

Request for review of sentence.

That before proceeding further with the Petition, his solicitors, Messrs. Cooper and Bake, asked your Lordship to direct that the sentence be submitted to the Chief Justice of the West African Settlements for review under sections 14 and 29 of the Order in Council.

That it would be competent for the Secretary of State in course of time to remit the sentence of deportation should it be considered safe for Reece himself that he should return to the coast, but that your Lordship saw no ground, as at present advised, for ordering a review of the sentence of the Consular Court by the Chief Justice of the West African Settlements.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether Messrs. Cooper and Bake could properly be informed to that effect, and with any other observations which we might wish to offer on the case.

---

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to report—

No ground for acceding to request.

That, in our opinion, there is no sufficient ground for ordering a review of the sentence in this case, and that Messrs. Cooper and Bake may properly be informed that your Lordship has so decided.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received November 27.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, November 27, 1888.

Detention of the "Brabo," with contract labourers for the Congo, by Her Majesty's ship "Griffon," and removal of negroes therefrom.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 23rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin,† with reference to the boarding, off the Eastern African Coast, of the Belgian steamer "Brabo," by Her Majesty's gun-vessel "Griffon," and the forcible removal of the negroes who were on board the former vessel.

That the facts of the case were not yet known in any detail, but that it was believed that the extract from "l'Indépendance Belge" of the 19th instant (which was inclosed) was not inaccurate in any material respect, and that it was assumed, for the purpose of this reference, that the "Brabo" was a common carrying ship under charter from the Government of the Congo Free State, and conveying, amongst other things, a number of contract labourers, who had received wages in advance, to the Congo.

That there seemed clearly to have been no ground for suspecting the "Brabo" of being engaged in the Traffic of Slaves, or of having been fitted out for that purpose, or of having been engaged in the Traffic during the voyage on which she was engaged. (See Article II of the African Slave Trade Treaty of the 20th December, 1841.)

That the Admiral appeared to have decided that there was no justification for detaining the vessel, and she was allowed to proceed on her way; but that because apparently two of the coloured labourers on board alleged that they were embarked against their will they were removed from the ship and taken to Zanzibar, where they then were on board a British man-of-war awaiting further instructions.

That it was not unimportant to notice, in connection with the proceedings of the Commander of the "Griffon," that Slave Trade within the meaning of the various Treaties directed to its suppression was now carried on only in native boats, which unfortunately were frequently allowed to float European flags (see with regard to this system Law Officers' Report No. 51 of 1878), and that the "Brabo" was an ocean-going steamer of European build, and was, moreover, when boarded, found to be under charter for the Congo, where the Slave Trade did not exist, so that it seemed impossible to contend that the Commander of the "Griffon" had any reasonable ground for suspecting that her employment was unlawful.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to mention that the international engagements of Belgium with respect to Slave Traffic would be found in the Treaty between Great Britain, Austria, Prussia, and Russia signed at London on the 20th December, 1841, and in the Treaty (and Protocol annexed thereto) by which Belgium, on the 24th February, 1848, acceded to the Treaty of London above mentioned.

That the Belgian Consul at Zanzibar had protested against the action of the "Griffon," while the British Admiral on the East African Station had applied to Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General for free papers for the two men who were removed from the "Brabo."

That it was proposed, in answer to a telegraphic request for instructions which had been received from Colonel Euan-Smith, to inform him that he had no authority to give the two men free papers, and that they should be forthwith handed over to the Belgian Consul.

Proposed instructions. Proceedings illegal.

That it was also proposed that the Admiral should be instructed that the proceedings of the "Griffon" were illegal and could not be approved.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the proposed instructions to Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar, and to the Admiral commanding on the East African Station respectively, were right and proper, or whether they might in any respect, and, if so, how, be advantageously amended.

We have also the honour to acknowledge the receipt of a further letter from Sir J. Pauncefote, dated the 26th instant, inclosing a despatch addressed by the Belgian Minister for Foreign Affairs to Baron Solvyns,* the Belgian Minister at this Court, forwarding documents showing the conditions under which the Zanzibar labourers are usually engaged for service by the Congo State.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and in obedience to your Lordship's commands have the honour to report—

No. 11.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received May 26.)

My Lord,
Royal Courts of Justice, May 24, 1888.

Claim of Mr. Hancox on Brazilian Government in consequence of annulment of contract.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 9th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list,† relating to a claim of indemnity which had been preferred by Mr. Joseph Hancox, a British subject, against the Brazilian Government, in consequence of their alleged illegal annulment of a contract which he had entered into with them for the rain-water drainage of a part of the city of Rio de Janeiro.

That full particulars of the breach of the contract complained of were given in the letter of the 8th October, 1887, addressed by Mr. Hancox to Her Majesty's Representative in Brazil (see Confidential Print, Inclosure 1 in No. 1), to which letter a copy of the contract itself, and of other documents bearing on the present claim, were appended.

That it would be seen that the contract in question was entered into on the 30th January, 1877; and that, notwithstanding the constant financial and other difficulties with which Mr. Hancox had to contend, he continued to persevere in the execution of the works until the 17th June, 1886, when, without any reason being alleged, or promise of settlement offered, he received an order to stop all works at the end of that month.

That Mr. Hancox alleged that up to that time he had fulfilled all the conditions and views of the Government in every respect, and that at that time he had provided the necessary material and plans for carrying out, and had a staff adequate to carry out, the contract to the end.

That he was thus left with all his liabilities, engagements with his workpeople, materials and plant, on hand, and had suffered in consequence irreparable loss.

That on the 28th September, 1886, he petitioned the Minister for Public Works and Agriculture, and obtained restitution of the caution-money he had deposited, and also payment for the balance of actual work done.

Compensation refused.

That he was, however, refused all compensation in respect of the material thrown on his hands, for the indemnification of his staff, and for his personal losses; and that it would be observed, moreover, that Baron de Cotegipe, in the course of the interview which he afforded to Mr. Macdonell upon the subject of the claim in question, did not allege that Mr. Hancox had been guilty of any breach of contract, but insisted on the right of the Government to deal with the matter as they thought proper.

That from the decision of the Ministry of Public Works he appealed to the Council of State, who, however, recommended the rejection of his appeal to the Princess Imperial Regent; and that on the 26th November, 1887, Her Imperial Highness approved their recommendation, and declared its rejection in the name of the Emperor.

That it appeared that by appealing in the first instance to the Council of State, without having previously invoked the assistance of the ordinary legal Tribunals, Mr. Hancox had followed the course usually prescribed in Brazil, in cases where the action of an Administrative Department of the State was involved, and that he had employed the only means open to him to obtain redress without going through what had been described as a "useless, endless, and ruinously expensive process" (see Mr. Macdonell's Memorandum of the 5th January, 1888).

That it appeared, moreover, from that Memorandum, that the Council of State had power, if not to overrule the Judgments of the Law Courts, at any rate to refuse to apply to the Chamber for the funds necessary to carry out their decisions.

That, in those circumstances, Mr. Hancox now appealed to Her Majesty's Government to give their official support to him in the claim which he now made against the Government of Brazil for a return of the moneys and retentions in their hands, that they should take the material he has provided for works, and that they should give him a reasonable indemnity for the breach of their contract with him.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government might properly grant to Mr. Hancox the assistance and support for which he asked, and with any observations which we might have to offer generally upon the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

H. M.'s Govt. may use influence to get claim settled by arbitration.

That, considering all the circumstances, we think that Her Majesty's Government may properly use their influence to obtain a settlement of Mr. Hancox's claims by urging the Brazilian Government to consent to submit them to arbitration if they cannot come to an agreement with him.

If opposed, should not press for full amount claimed.

In our opinion, however, if opposed, Her Majesty's Government should not press the claim to the full amount mentioned in Mr. Hancox's letter of the 23rd December, 1887, as some of the items appear somewhat of a speculative character.

No. 12.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received August 22.)

Royal Courts of Justice, August 21, 1888.

My Lord,

Claim of English Secretary (a British subject) to the Chinese Legation to exemption from parish rates on his private house.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a note from the Chinese Minister,* inclosing a notice of distraint which had been served by the Vestry of St. Marylebone upon Sir Halliday Macartney, English Secretary to the Chinese Legation, for refusing to pay the parish rates.

That Sir Halliday Macartney was a British subject, who came over from China in 1877, attached to the suite of the Chinese Minister in the capacity of English Secretary, and that his name was inserted on the list of persons composing the establishment of the Foreign Embassies and Legations which was annually supplied to the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, under the Statute of 7 Anne, cap. 12.

That in the year 1884, however, the question was raised whether a British subject employed in such a capacity could properly be allowed diplomatic privileges and immunities, and claim to be put on the Sheriffs' list.

That on that point Sir Julian Pauncefote was to draw our attention to Sir. J. Dodson's Report of the 4th May, 1850, at p. 8 of the Confidential Print,† which was inclosed; to the correspondence between Lord Palmerston and Viscount Moncorvo, the Portuguese Minister, of the same year; and to the general correspondence which took place in 1884 between the Foreign Office and the Chinese, Japanese, and Siamese Legations, which would be found at pp. 1 to 22 of the same Print.

His exclusion from the Sheriffs' list.

That the result of the last-mentioned correspondence was that it was decided that the names of the English Secretaries to the Chinese, Japanese, and Siamese Legations should be omitted from the Sheriffs' list. That that decision, and the reasons on which it was based, were communicated to the Chinese Minister in a note from Earl Granville of the 30th August, 1884 (Print, p. 6).

His exemption, by courtesy, from Crown taxes.

That in the following year it was decided, with the concurrence of the Law Officers of the Crown, to relieve the English Secretaries of the Chinese, Japanese, and Siamese Legations (but only as a matter of courtesy) from such taxes as the Crown had legal power to remit (Print, p. 23). That the question had rested on that footing until the present time.

That a claim had now been made, as before stated, upon Sir Halliday Macartney for the payment of the parish rates of St. Marylebone, which the Crown had no power to remit.

That Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department, in the first instance, recommended, upon your Lordship's suggestion, that the parish authorities should not press their demand. That the replies received from the Vestry would be found at p. 10 of the Print.

That in Lord Granville's letter to the Chinese Minister of the 30th August, 1884 (Print, p. 6), it was stated that it had for many years been a settled principle that no British subject attached to a foreign Embassy or Legation other than a "domestic" or "domestic servant" was entitled to proclaim the protection afforded to the diplomatic body in this country by the Statute of 7 Anne, cap. 12, and that a notification to that effect was referred to, which was published in the "London Gazette" so long ago as the year 1786, and which would be found at p. 6 of the Print.

His refusal to pay rates.

Rates levied by distraint.

That, nevertheless, Sir H. Macartney claimed immunity from the rates in question by virtue of his position as English Secretary to the Chinese Legation, and had refused to pay them. That the consequence had been that the Vestry had caused the rates to be levied by distraint in his private dwelling-house at 3, Harley Place. That the Chinese Minister, in his note of the 17th instant, characterized that proceeding as a "gross breach of his diplomatic privileges," and called on Her Majesty's Government to have the man "whom the Vestry had presumed to put in possession in his Secretary's house" immediately removed, and requested that the name of Sir Halliday Macartney might be replaced on the list furnished to the Sheriff of persons entitled to diplomatic privileges.

That the Minister further contended that it had been ruled by the highest Courts in this country that the words "domestic servant" found in the Statute of 7 Anne, cap. 12, included Councillors, Secretaries, and Attachés of Legations.

But that, according to Sir J. Dodson's Report (Print, p. 8), Secretaries and Attachés residing elsewhere than in the house of the Ambassador or Minister were not entitled by law to diplomatic privileges, though it was the practice to extend those privileges to them as a matter of indulgence and courtesy.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether Sir Halliday Macartney was legally entitled to the diplomatic privilege claimed on his behalf by the Chinese Minister; and, if so, what steps (if any) should be taken by Her Majesty's Government to protect him from the violation of that privilege.

He is not entitled to the diplomatic privilege claimed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, Sir Halliday Macartney is not (being a British subject) legally entitled to the diplomatic privilege claimed on his behalf.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 20th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin† with reference to the right of the Chinese Government to continue to exercise jurisdiction over a woman of Chinese nationality of origin subsequently to her marriage, according to German law, with a German subject resident in China.

That it would be seen by the Memorandum communicated by Count Leyden, the Secretary of the German Embassy at this Court, that a case had lately occurred at Swatow in which the Chinese authorities had refused to give up their jurisdiction over the Chinese wife of a German subject.

Proposed German Agreement as to surrender of such jurisdiction.

That with a view to obviate the recurrence of similar complications in the future, the German Minister at Peking had conditionally entered into, and now submitted for ratification by his Government, an Agreement with the Tsung-li Yamên, by which a notice of the marriage given to the Chinese local authorities was to be made the only condition of the assent of the Chinese Government to surrender that jurisdiction over the wife which it now asserted.

That the proposed Agreement, however, had not been formally approved by the German Imperial Government, who had meanwhile requested to be favoured with the views of Her Majesty's Government upon the subject.

That the papers had been referred to Sir R. Rennie, Chief Justice of Her Majesty's Supreme Court for China and Japan, now on leave of absence, and that his views on the subject would be found in his Memorandum of the 6th August, which was inclosed.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether there was any objection to the arrangement proposed by the German Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to report—

No objection to proposed Agreement.

That, in our opinion, there is no objection to the arrangement proposed by the German Government.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, June 13, 1888.

Imprisonment of Major J. Colborne for perjury at trial of B. H. Clere.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 19th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to the case of Major the Honourable John Colborne, a British subject, now undergoing a sentence of imprisonment for wilful and corrupt perjury committed during the trial of a criminal indictment for libel against one B. H. Clere (otherwise Vizetelly), on the 2nd March, 1887, before Her Majesty's Consular Court for Egypt sitting at Cairo.

That Major Colborne was tried on the 6th March last in Her Britannic Majesty's Consular Court for Egypt sitting at Alexandria, before Mr. Consul and Judge Cookson and a petty jury of five British subjects. That he was found guilty by the jury, who, however, joined to their verdict a recommendation to mercy, and that he was thereupon sentenced by the Judge to six months' imprisonment.

His Petition for statement of a case for the Supreme Court; and for suspension of his sentence.

That he subsequently presented a Petition (see Inclosure 1 in his letter to Mr. Cookson of the 4th April, 1888) to the Judge praying him, under the circumstances and for the reasons therein appearing, to state a case for the opinion of Her Majesty's Supreme Consular Court for the Ottoman Dominions at Constantinople, and to reserve five several points of law therein specified, in order that if the conviction were erroneous in matter of law it might be quashed by the Supreme Court. That, meanwhile, he requested that, pending the decision of the Supreme Court on the points involved, the execution of his sentence might be suspended, and that he might be released on entering into such recognizances as the Court might require.

Provisions of Order in Council applicable.

That section 307 of the Levant Order in Council of the 12th December, 1873, upon which that application was based, provided that, where a person was convicted, either by summary trial or on indictment, before a Court other than the Supreme Court (in that provision referred to as the Court below)—

1. "If he considers the conviction erroneous in law, then, on his application (unless it appears merely frivolous, when it may be refused), . . . . the Court below shall state a case setting out the facts and the grounds of the conviction, and the question of law, and send it to the Supreme Court. Thereupon the Court below shall, as it thinks fit, either postpone judgment on the conviction, or respite execution of the judgment, and either commit the person convicted to prison, or take security for him to appear and receive judgment or to deliver himself for execution of the judgment (as the case may require) at an appointed time and place."

That the section then went on to provide for the hearing and final determination of the matter by the Supreme Court.

Refusal of Consul to release him.

That the Consul, however, considered that, as Major Colborne was already in prison when he was asked to state a case, it was not right, as the points raised were merely technical, to release him under section 307, more especially as, in his opinion, there was no doubt as to his (Major Colborne's) moral guilt, and that it also appeared to him doubtful whether, if Major Colborne were released on bail and forfeited bail by leaving Ottoman dominions, he could be arrested elsewhere.

That the Consul pointed out, moreover, that it was open to Major Colborne to apply to the Supreme Court at Constantinople for his release.

That your Lordship had at present no specific information as to whether the Consul refused to state a case for the opinion of the Supreme Court, and whether, if so, he stated as his reason for so doing that the application of Major Colborne was, in his judgment, "merely frivolous."

That your Lordship, however, in the absence of specific information on the point, was inclined to surmise, from Sir E. Baring's telegram of the 9th May, that Mr. Cookson did so refuse.

Alternative Petition for a free pardon.

That it would be seen that the petitioner prayed in the alternative (see Petition of the 4th April, 1888) that your Lordship would be pleased to recommend Her Majesty to grant him a free pardon; but that, in the absence of a recommendation to that effect from the Judge who tried the case, your Lordship would, having regard both to the language of section 310 of the Order in Council, and to the opinion expressed by Mr. Cookson as to the prisoner's moral guilt, be disinclined at present to advise Her Majesty to grant him any immediate mitigation or remission of the sentence passed upon him, unless the proceedings had, in our opinion, amounted to so clear a miscarriage of justice as to entitle him at once to be set at liberty.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to—

1. Whether, for the general grounds and reasons set forth in his Petition to Mr. Cookson, Major Colborne was entitled to have a case stated for the opinion of the Supreme Court, reserving the various points of law (or any of them) therein mentioned, or whether Mr. Cookson was entitled to treat his application as "merely frivolous," and on that ground to refuse it;

2. Whether if, in our opinion, Mr. Cookson was not entitled to refuse his application on the ground last stated, Major Colborne should, pending the result of the appeal and on his giving proper security for his reappearance to the Judge, at once be released; or

3. Whether, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, there had been such a miscarriage of justice as rendered it advisable for your Lordship to recommend Her Majesty to grant Major Colborne either a free pardon or some immediate mitigation or remission of the sentence passed upon him.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and in obedience to your Lordship's commands have the honour to report—

Consul justified in refusing application to state a case.

1 and 2. That, in our opinion, Mr. Cookson might reasonably consider the application to state a case upon the points raised in Major Colborne's Petition as "merely frivolous," and therefore refuse it.

No apparent miscarriage of justice.

3. We are unable to say, upon the materials before us, that there has been any miscarriage of justice, and we see no reason to distrust the judgment of Mr. Cookson,

1888

No reason to distrust judgment of Consul as to the evidence or as to guilt.

either as to the sufficiency of the evidence, or the moral guilt of the defendant, or the term of punishment appropriate to the case.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received February 8.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, February 7, 1888.

A. Bahagiar, Consular prisoner. Petition for remission or reduction of sentence.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list* with reference to a Petition which your Lordship had received from a Consular prisoner named Andrea Bahagiar, praying that either his "release or a reduction of the remaining part of his sentence" might be granted to him.

That Bahagiar was tried and convicted before the Consular Court at Tunis on the 1st June, 1883, of three several offences: (1) of wounding with a revolver a police officer named Bechir-el-Arbi, who was endeavouring to effect his arrest; (2) of breaking into the shop of Fino Giovanni; and (3) of breaking into the shop of Demetrio Cavopulo, and was sentenced to terms of five years' penal servitude, of two years' imprisonment with hard labour, and of two further years with hard labour for such offences respectively.

His conduct "very good."

That he had been confined in the Corradino Prison at Malta since the 14th June, 1883, and that his conduct since his imprisonment appeared to have been hitherto "very good," and that, should it so continue, he would in ordinary course become entitled to his "release by days of grace" on the 22nd September, 1889.

That he had already on a previous occasion (in 1886) petitioned the Secretary of State for a mitigation of his sentence, but that our predecessors in office, who were consulted with reference to the propriety of then granting his application, expressed an opinion that there were no grounds upon which any mitigation of sentence could, at that time, properly be granted to him.

That they added, however, that if Bahagiar's conduct in prison continued to be good the matter would be, as they thought, one proper for the consideration of the Secretary of State at a later period.

That having regard to the fact that the prisoner's conduct throughout his imprisonment had been very good, and to the opinion expressed upon the case by the then Law Officers in 1886, your Lordship was inclined to think that Bahagiar might properly be informed that, if he continued to conduct himself well up to that date, your Lordship would recommend his release on the 30th November of this year, when he would have actually served five and a-half years of his sentence.

That before so doing, however, your Lordship desired to be informed, for your Lordship's guidance, whether such a course would in our opinion be right and proper, or whether, having regard to the serious nature of the offences of which Bahagiar was convicted, the mere fact that his conduct in prison had been exceptionally good was not of itself sufficient to justify any further mitigation of his punishment beyond that already to be accorded to him by the operation of the "days of grace" system.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was therefore to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether any remission of Bahagiar's sentence, and, if so, whether that proposed above, or what other mitigation of his punishment might properly be made.

---

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Mitigation of sentence by usual "days of grace" sufficient.

That we gather from the Report of our predecessors of the 28th August, 1886, that the fact that the sentence of nine years passed upon the prisoner would be reduced, and that he would be discharged at the end of six and a quarter years, was not before them.

Under ordinary circumstances, we consider that the mitigation of sentence by the shortening of the term by days of grace in consideration of good behaviour is, in the absence of special ground, sufficient reward for such good behaviour.

He should serve one year of his second term.

Unless, therefore, there are some special reasons given, we think that, having regard to the nature of the offences of which he was convicted, the prisoner should not be released before the 22nd September, 1889, but at any rate, that he should serve one year of his second term, that is, to the 14th June, 1889.

(Confidential.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, October 29, 1888.

Minquiers Rocks.

British title to sovereignty over.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the inclosed Confidential Print and other correspondence respecting the right of sovereignty possessed by Her Majesty over the Minquiers Rocks.

That the position of the rocks in question would be seen from the accompanying Map, while the devolution of the British title to sovereignty over them was concisely traced in the opinion submitted by the Law Officers of the Crown for Jersey to the Lieutenant-Governor of that island on the 11th August last (Confidential Print, p. 8, Inclosure 2 in No. 18).

That a description of the islets themselves, and of their topographical relations to the coasts of Jersey and of Normandy respectively, was given in Sir E. Hertslet's Memorandum of the 10th August, 1869, and the Annex thereto of the 7th June, 1888 (Confidential Print, pp. 6-10), and that the salient points of the opposing French and British claims were summarized and contrasted in Sir E. Hertslet's Memorandum of the 2nd September, 1888, which was to be found at p. 20 of the Confidential Print.

That it would be seen (Home Office to Foreign Office of the 20th September, 1888) that Mr. Secretary Matthews entirely concurred in the conclusions stated in the last-mentioned Memorandum, supported as they were by the opinion of the Law Officers of Jersey, and considered that the right to the sovereignty of the rocks in question was clearly vested in the British Crown.

That with that view your Lordship was disposed to agree; but that before finally intimating to the Government of the French Republic the views of Her Majesty's Government upon the point, your Lordship would be glad to be informed whether or not, in our opinion, the right of Her Majesty to sovereignty over the Minquiers Rocks was established beyond dispute.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the question submitted therein, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received November 22.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, November 21, 1888.

Schools in Tunis.

French inspection of, and use of French language in.

Decree as to.

That the Italian Government held (see the late Count Robilant's note of the 24th September, 1888) that that Decree was not applicable to Italian subjects resident in the Regency, and that the grounds upon which they based their contention would be found concisely stated in that note.

As to immunity of British and Italian subjects therefrom.

That your Lordship was disposed to think that the Italian contention was correct, and that Her Majesty's Government was entitled to claim for British subjects resident in the Regency of Tunis a like immunity from the operation of that Decree.

That a Memorandum had been prepared showing the grounds on which, as was conceived, the Decree was, in so far as it purported to affect British subjects, beyond the powers of the Bey, and incapable of enforcement by the French Tribunals. (See Sir J. Pauncefote's Memorandum of the 6th October, 1888.)

That the French text of the Decree itself would be found, extracted from the "Journal Officiel Tunisien," of the 20th September last, at p. 4 of the inclosed Confidential Print.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was also, with reference to the binding effect upon France, under the Franco-Tunisian Treaty of the 12th May, 1881, of the existing Treaty obligations of the Bey, to refer to a report which was furnished on the 28th April, 1886, to the then Secretary of State by our predecessors in office (Law Officers' Report No. 26, of 1886).

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we should take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government were entitled to contend that the Beylical Decree in question was inapplicable to British subjects; and that, should we be of that opinion, your Lordship would further be glad to be informed whether the views put forward in Sir Julian Pauncefote's Memorandum of the 6th October had our general concurrence as a statement of the grounds upon which the contention of Her Majesty's Government might properly be based.

We were also honoured with a Memorandum from Sir Julian Pauncefote, dated the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit, for our consideration, a copy of a further despatch* (and inclosures) from Her Majesty's Consul at Tunis.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to report—

Decree not applicable to British subjects. Concur in Memorandum.

That, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government are entitled to contend that the Decree of the Bey of Tunis of the 15th September is inapplicable to British subjects, and that we concur in Sir Julian Pauncefote's Memorandum as a statement of the grounds upon which the contention of Her Majesty's Government may properly be based.

Last sentence should be omitted.

We think, however, it might be well to omit the last sentence, as we doubt whether it is stated with sufficient precision or detail.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received February 18.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, February 17, 1888.

Consular certificates, attestations, and notarial acts.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, with reference to the instructions which should be issued to Her Majesty's Consuls for their guidance in cases where they were called upon to grant certificates of fact, or to attest depositions and affidavits.

Proposed instructions.

That it was proposed, in consequence of, and in connection with, the recent enactment of the Order in Council establishing new Tables of Fees for the Consular Service, to issue a fresh Code of General Instructions to Her Majesty's Consuls in substitution for those of 1879 at present in force; and that as doubt was entertained as to the correctness of certain of the statements in the paragraph (section 18) of those Instructions which dealt with the question of certificates and affidavits, the present appeared to be a favourable opportunity for reconstructing, and, if necessary, amending, its language.

That the paragraph (18 of the General Instructions of 1879) referred to was adapted from, and founded on, the terms of the Circular letter of the 23rd August, 1847, which originally itself formed Inclosure No. 22 of the previous General Instructions, and had been, before its issue, submitted to, and approved by, the then Queen's Advocate, Sir J. Dodson.

That the paragraph which it was now proposed to substitute therefor was inclosed, and marked "B," together with a Memorandum (marked "B¹"), which dealt at greater length with the questions involved, and upon the lines of which the paragraph ("B") was in a great measure based.

That other papers dealing more particularly with the duties and powers of notaries with respect to the execution of notarial acts in, and of translations from, foreign languages were also inclosed.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to—

1. Whether the powers conferred upon Her Majesty's Consuls by the 20th section of the Consular Act, 1825, in respect of administering oaths, &c., and performing notarial acts, were to be regarded as facultative or imperative?

2. Whether it was competent to a Consul to demand to examine any document which was brought before him for purposes of attestation in all cases, and as a matter of strict right, or whether, if not, he might still insist on so doing whenever he had reasonable cause to believe or suspect that fraud or illegality of some kind was involved?

3. Whether, as regarded the matter specially dealt with in the preceding questions, the language of the suggested paragraph ("B") required amendment or amplification; and whether, in other respects, its terms were such as, in the circumstances were right and proper to be approved by your Lordship?

---

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Administration of oaths obligatory.

1. That, in our opinion, it is obligatory upon a Consular officer to administer oaths or to take affidavits, when required to do so by British subjects, in any case in which an oath, affidavit, or affirmation may properly be required. (See 5 & 6 Wm. IV, cap. 62, sec. 13.)

As to examination of documents attested.

2. That it is not competent to a Consul to demand to examine the documents in respect of which he is called upon to administer the oath, except so far as is necessary to satisfy himself, in the case of an affidavit, that the matter is one as to which an oath can be lawfully administered.

Amending proposed instructions.

3. We suggest the following amendments in "B":—

Clause 3 should be amended by substituting the following clause:—

"Consular officers, in administering an oath, or in attesting the fact of a British subject having affixed his signature to a document in their presence, only attest to the fact of the oath, affidavit, or affirmation having been made, or the document signed, before them, and they do not in any way guarantee the correctness of the contents of such affidavit or document.

"They are not entitled to decline to attest on the ground of their not being acquainted with, or to insist on acquainting themselves with, the contents of the documents they are called upon to attest, except so far as is necessary, in the case of an affidavit, to ascertain that the matter is one as to which an oath can lawfully be administered."

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received March 21.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, March 20, 1888.

Right of retired diplomatists to continuance of pensions.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to submit to us the following question which had arisen with respect to the absolute right of retired diplomatists to continue, under all circumstances, in receipt of a pension when such pension had been actually granted to them in accordance with the provisions of "The Diplomatic Salaries, &c., Act, 1869" (32 & 33 Vict., cap. 43).

Case of Sir H. Elliot's article in "Nineteenth Century."

That an article had been written by Sir Henry Elliot, lately Her Majesty's Ambassador to the Sublime Porte, and had been published in the "Nineteenth Century" magazine for February last, treating of matters that took place while he was Ambassador at Constantinople.

That that article was a very unfortunate one, and had given profound offence to the Ottoman Government; that it would certainly not have been permitted to appear if the Foreign Office had been aware of it and able to prevent it.

That your Lordship was desirous of being favoured with our opinion as to whether the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, or Her Majesty's Government, for the time being, had the power of attaching, either in the present or the future, conditions to the pensions which were from time to time granted, under the provisions of that Act, to diplomatists on their retirement from active service.

Suggestion as to forfeiture of present or future pensions.

That your Lordship wished in particular to be advised whether it would be legal, either in respect to those who were now in actual receipt of such pensions, or those who would receive them hereafter, to provide by regulation that if any retired diplomatist published any statement with respect to matters that had taken place, or come to his knowledge, during his service under the Crown, without first submitting it to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs for the time being, he should ipso facto become liable to forfeit his pension.

That with reference to such a regulation as was suggested your Lordship also desired to know whether, in our opinion, any essential distinction of law might be drawn between its imposition upon those who were actually members of the Diplomatic Service at the date of its issue and upon those who might enter the Service after that date.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was also at the same time to inquire whether, in the event of so extreme a case arising as might (all other means failing) in his opinion render it necessary or advisable for the Secretary of State to press upon the Treasury that they should for the future withhold payment of the periodical instalments of a pension already granted, and in the event of that Department consenting to adopt such a course, any legal remedy, either by Petition of Right against the Crown or otherwise, would be open to the grantee of such pension to enforce its continued payment.

That it was conceived that a Petition of Right would not, under any circumstances, be maintainable for the recovery of a civil pension either granted or grantable under the provisions of the Superannuation Acts (see more particularly the case of Cooper v. the Queen, L. R., 14 Chancery Division, p. 311), but that the language of "The Diplomatic Salaries, &c., Act, 1869," which alone seemed applicable to the present case, differed in some important particulars from that of the Superannuation Acts, to the advantage, as was thought, of the grantee of a pension under the former enactment.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the questions raised in his letter into our consideration, and that in favouring your Lordship with our opinion upon them we would at the same time add any other general observations which we might desire to offer on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Cannot withhold pension granted under Diplomatic Act; but may incite Parliament to refuse grant.

That, in our opinion, where pensions have been granted under the Act of 1869, the Secretary of State has no authority to withhold payment of such pensions, except on the grounds specified in sections 11 and 12 of that Act. We think he is bound to submit to Parliament an estimate including all such pensions, but he may, in the event of any case occurring which in his judgment is sufficiently serious to require such action, incite the House of Commons to refuse to vote the particular pension, and if it should so refuse the pension cannot be paid.

Cannot attach conditions.

Legislation necessary.

We are of opinion that the Secretary of State cannot lawfully attach conditions to the grant of statutory pensions, and that if a pension were granted on conditions they would be held null and void, even if they had been signed by the pensioner in token of acceptance. It might, no doubt, be more easy, if such conditions were accepted, to induce Parliament to refuse to provide the pension upon their being subsequently broken, but we do not think the matter can be satisfactorily dealt with except by legislation.

As to maintenance of Petition of Right.

If Parliament has voted the money for a particular pension, then, in our opinion, a Petition of Right could be maintained.

Marriages abroad. Proposed new Consular Instructions.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, June 1, 1888.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V Lister's letter of the 26th April last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the inclosed printed paper relating to the question of marriages solemnized abroad under the Consular Marriage Act, which paper it was proposed to insert as a chapter in the new Consular Instructions now in course of preparation, with the object of preventing, as far as possible (pending the passing of a new Act upon the subject), the repetition of many of the cases of irregularity which had taken place with regard to Consular marriages.

That we should observe that those proposed instructions were framed mainly on the Reports which had, at different times, been drawn up by the Law Officers of the Crown for the guidance of the Foreign Office on doubtful points as they had arisen; and that, to enable us to refer readily to those Reports, a copy of each of them was inclosed, together with copies of the Acts of Parliament also referred to in the inclosed printed paper.

That Sir T. V. Lister was to request that we would take that paper into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the several points referred to therein, together with any observations which we might have to offer generally on the subject.

Approve Instructions as amended.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we have perused and amended the proposed Consular Instructions, and, as altered by us, approve the same as proper and sufficient.

No. 22.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Mr. Wright to the President of the Board of Trade.

[After considering the following Memorandum by the Solicitor to the Board of Trade, in connection with the additional information annexed, the Law Officers and Mr. Wright reported as below on the 7th June, 1888 :—]

Arrest of foreign fishing-boats off the Goodwin Sands. (a.) At low water. (b.) At high water.

The following are the questions raised by Commander Suckling :—

(a.) Is it legal for a cruizer to arrest a foreign fishing-boat if found fishing within 3 miles of the Goodwin Sands at low water?

(b.) Presuming (a) to be legal, is it legal for a cruizer to arrest a foreign fishing-boat that she sees fishing within 3 miles of the Goodwin Sands, but by the time the cruizer has overtaken the foreign boat the tide has covered the Sands?

The law involved in the consideration of these questions is so obscure that I felt it difficult to write anything which could be looked upon as authoritative and used with confidence in practice.

I therefore thought it well to obtain advice from the Law Officers of the Crown, and the following is a copy of the opinion they have given.

[The following additional information was also laid before the Law Officers :—]

The Goodwin Sands are lighted and buoyed by the Trinity House, who levy dues on British and foreign vessels in respect of the lights and buoys. The Sands are included in the Customs port of Dover, and in the district of the Dover Receiver of Wreck, and vessels stranding on the Sands are treated as if stranded on the shores of the United Kingdom. They are also within the limits of the jurisdiction of the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports.

---

Report.

Jurisdiction should be asserted in cases (a) and (b).

In our opinion, although the questions are not free from grave doubt, jurisdiction ought to be asserted in both the cases put by Commander Suckling.

The objections to jurisdiction on which the majority of the Court relied in Reg. v. Keyn (2 Exchequer Div. 63) are removed by "The Sea Fisheries Act, 1883," section 18 (and see "The Territorial Waters Jurisdiction Act, 1878," 41 & 42 Vict., cap. 73, the preamble and section 5), if the locality in question is within the exclusive fishery limits assigned to Great Britain under the Convention confirmed by the Act of 1883, and the sole question appears to us to be whether the Goodwin Sands are comprised in the description, "the dependent islands and banks," in the IInd Article of the Convention. This appears to us to be a question of construction to be decided with reference to the local circumstances and to the acts of jurisdiction ordinarily exercised at the Goodwin Sands without international objection.

Evidence that the Goodwins are a "dependent bank" not conclusive.

We find nothing to indicate that a bank is necessarily excluded because a deep-water channel separates it from the mainland or nearest island, and we think that the facts that the Goodwin Sands are lighted and buoyed by British authorities, who levy dues there, and that they are part of an English port, and included in the district of a Receiver of Wreck, are some, though far from conclusive, evidence of a dependency.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received July 11.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, July 10, 1888.

Claims to exemption from taxes on account of diplomatic privilege in cases of:—

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 14th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list,* with reference to three cases in which the question had arisen whether exemption from taxes should be allowed on the ground of diplomatic privilege attaching to the persons on whose property such taxes had been assessed.

(1) A Secretary of Embassy in respect of a house owned and occupied by him.

That, in the first of those cases, exemption had been claimed by Don Pedro de Zulueta, the First Secretary of the Spanish Embassy, in respect of his residence, No. 54, Cadogan Place, of which he was both owner and occupier.

(2) Servants in respect of houses leased and partially sublet by them.

That, in the remaining two cases, exemption was claimed for Thomas Bunclark, domestic servant to the Turkish Embassy, and for Domingos Borges, messenger to the Portuguese Legation, in respect of houses of which they were the lessors, but in portions only of which they themselves respectively resided, the remainder of those houses being, in each case, sublet in lodgings by them.

That the facts of all three cases were fully set out in the Report (a copy of which was inclosed) made by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue to the Board of Treasury on the 9th May last, and that it would be seen that the first case (i.e., that of M. de Zulueta) differed very materially from the remaining two (those of Messrs. Bunclark and Borges), which, on the other hand, appeared, in their main legal aspects, to be practically analogous to each other.

Proposed reply to Treasury.

That, in reply to the Treasury letter of the 15th May, a draft had been prepared embodying the view which your Lordship was disposed to express regarding those cases, but that before actually communicating with the Treasury in the sense therein indicated, your Lordship desired to be favoured with our opinion as to whether the terms of that draft were right and proper in the circumstances.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

(2) No question as to liability of servants.

That, as regards the cases of Thomas Bunclark and Domingos Borges, no question as to their liability can be fairly raised, and we approve the terms of the draft letter so far as it relates to their cases.

(1) Secretary not exempt. Difficult to enforce payment.

As regards the case of M. de Zulueta, the point is not so clear, but, in our judgment, he is not exempt from the payment of income tax (Schedule A) as owner of the house, though there might be a difficulty in enforcing payment.

Approve reply as altered.

Should it be determined, as a matter of policy, not to press M. de Zulueta for payment, we think the terms of the letter, so far as it relates to his case, should be altered as shown in the draft.

Annex.

Draft of Letter to Treasury as finally amended.

Sir, Foreign Office, July , 1888.

IN reply to your letter of the 15th instant, I am directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to request that the Board of Inland Revenue be informed that, in the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown, M. de Zulueta, Secretary to the Spanish Embassy in London, is, as a matter of law, liable for the payment of income tax (Schedule A) as the owner of the house No. 54, Cadogan Place, which has been purchased by him; but that if payment be resisted, it is not desirable to endeavour to enforce it, as M. de Zulueta would be protected in his diplomatic character from any process of law which might be instituted to recover payment.

I am to add that M. de Zulueta has been recently transferred to Madrid, and the Board of Inland Revenue will probably concur in the view, that it would be unadvisable to press him for payment of the income tax during the period of his residence in London in the discharge of his diplomatic functions.

Lord Salisbury is further advised by the Law Officers that payment should be required in the cases of Messrs. Bunclark and Borges, domestic servants in the establishment of the Turkish Ambassador and of the Portuguese Minister respectively, on the ground that their occupancy of the houses in question for use as lodging-houses is not necessary for the convenience of the foreign Representatives in question, and cannot be made the subject of any diplomatic immunity.

Extradition. Draft Orders in Council applying Acts to Declaration with Spain;

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir James Fergusson's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a draft of an Order in Council applying the Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873, in the case of a Declaration between Great Britain and Spain, signed at Madrid on the 29th May last, for the purpose of amending the Extradition Treaty of the 4th June, 1878.

That copies of the said Declaration and Treaty were annexed, together with the correspondence marked in the margin.*

That Sir James Fergusson also had the honour to inclose a draft of a further Order in Council for the purpose of providing for the suspension in Canada of the Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873, in view of the recent consolidation of the Canadian Extradition Acts, under the circumstances set forth in the last paragraph of the Foreign Office letter of the 4th July to the Colonial Office.

That Sir James Fergusson was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the drafts of those two Orders in Council might properly be submitted to the Queen for Her Majesty's gracious approval.

Extradition of Marcelin from New South Wales to French.

"We were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bramston's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us copies of a letter from the Colonial Office (with its inclosures) to the Foreign Office, and of the reply from the latter Office, respecting the circumstances under which C. "We think the terms of section 11 of 'The Extradition Act, 1870," prevent the Secretary of State from surrendering a prisoner before the expiration of the fifteen days, and that if it is desirable to give the Secretary of State such a power further legislation is necessary.

Do not concur in above Report of 1885. Order in Council confirming a Treaty infringing section 11 of Act of 1870 not justifiable.

"We are unable to concur in the Report of our predecessors of the 7th January, 1885.

"It might possibly be contended that the provisions of section 5 of 'The Extradition Act, 1870,' render valid an Order in Council if made, but we do not think that any such argument would be sufficient justification for an Order in Council confirming a Treaty which so clearly infringed the provisions of section 11 of the Act."

Extension of Extradition Treaty to Protectorates.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 30th January last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin,† relative to a communication which had recently been made by the Imperial German Government to that of Her Majesty, inquiring whether the latter would be prepared to conclude an Agreement for the purpose of extending the provisions of the Extradition Treaty between Great Britain and Germany of the 14th May, 1872, to the British and German Protectorates adjoining each other in West Africa and elsewhere.

Proposed Agreement.

Reply as to necessity of legislation.

That to the communication thus made your Lordship, being of opinion that such an Agreement as was suggested therein could not be carried out by Her Majesty's Government without fresh legislation, considered it advisable to reply to the German Government expressing regret that, for the reason indicated, their suggestion could not be adopted for the present; but that your Lordship, at the same time, promised that the subject should receive the careful consideration of Her Majesty's Government.

Inconvenience of present arrangements.

That some practical inconvenience was undoubtedly occasioned from time to time when such cases as those particularly mentioned by Baron Plessen on the 8th November last arose, in consequence of the facility with which a criminal could effect his escape from German to British-protected territory, and of the subsequent inability of the British authorities either to punish him themselves or to return him to be dealt with by the established Courts of the place where the crime was committed.

Difficulties as to Protectorates.

That at the same time your Lordship was inclined at present to think, having regard to the views which successive Governments of Her Majesty had maintained with regard to the nature and limitations attaching to the various Protectorates which had of late years been proclaimed by Her Majesty, that not only would it not be possible to extend our Extradition Treaties to such Protectorates without fresh legislation, but that fresh Agreements assenting to such an extension would also be requisite between Her Majesty and the various protected States respectively involved.

Difference between British and German Protectorates.

That in the case of our own Protectorates, the protected State had been uniformly considered to preserve its autonomy in so far as the latter was not affected by Treaty, but that the German Imperial Government had, on the other hand, asserted, in respect of their Protectorates, a dominion and suzerainty so complete as, if it were admitted, would place them on an entirely different footing to those of the Queen, which could not, as was thought, be considered, for the purposes of "The Extradition Act, 1870," to be within Her Majesty's dominions.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the following points:—

1. Whether the terms of the reply returned to Count Hatzfeldt on the 26th January last were right and proper?
2. Whether the views put forward in his (Sir J. Pauncefote's) letter were correct?
3. In what manner, and by what means, could Her Majesty's Government acquire power to carry out an arrangement for the mutual extradition of offenders between British and German Protectorates?

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

Correctness of reply, and of letter of January 30.

1 and 2. That, in our opinion, the terms of the reply returned to Count Hatzfeldt on the 26th January last are right and proper, and the views put forward in the letter of Sir Julian Pauncefote of the 30th January, 1888, are correct.

Legislation or Agreement not advisable.

3. In our opinion, it will not be advisable to endeavour to provide by legislation or agreement for the mutual surrender of fugitive criminals by the English and German Protectorates. This could not be done without admitting that the Protectorate conferred the rights and duties of territorial sovereignty, and would, therefore, be in conflict with the principles hitherto maintained by Her Majesty's Government.

Should grant facilities for arrests by German officers.

We think the preferable course would be to instruct Her Majesty's officers in the Protectorate to give facilities to the German officers to arrest and conduct within the limits of the German Protectorate any persons who are alleged by the German Consular officer to be German subjects, and to have committed criminal offences within the jurisdiction of the German Courts.

We have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received March 14.)

Royal Courts of Justice, March 14, 1888.

My Lord,

Extension of Extradition Treaty to German Protectorates.

We were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, and in connection with the papers relative to the same subject which were referred to us on the 30th January for our Report, a Memorandum of a further verbal communication made by Prince Ratibor on behalf of the German Imperial Government to your Lordship on the 9th February last.

Proposal excluding British Protectorates.

That your Lordship understood the alternative suggestion thus made by Prince Ratibor, and embodied in the Memorandum, to amount practically to a proposition that Her Majesty's Government should agree to extend the operation of the Extradition Treaty between Great Britain and Germany to fugitives from German Protectorates who might take refuge in any part of the British dominions, in which latter category, however, it was clearly understood that the Protectorates of Her Majesty could not be included.

That the Extradition Treaty now in force between Great Britain and Germany only applied (see Article I thereof) to "persons who, being accused or convicted of a crime committed in the territory of the one party shall be found within the territory of the other party;" and that the German Imperial Government had on former occasions specifically stated to that of Her Britannic Majesty that although the Emperor of Germany possessed, in their view, suzerainty over his Protectorates (and consequently, as would no doubt be held, jurisdiction therein for purposes of extradition), the Protectorates themselves were not regarded as being German territory ("Gebiete") in the sense in which that term would be applicable to the integral portions of the German Empire.

That the nature and extent of the suzerainty over, and jurisdiction within, the State-protected territories of the Empire claimed by the German Government might conveniently be gathered from the following documents, to which Sir Julian Pauncefote was especially to direct our attention:—

1. Mr. Scott's No. 315 of the 10th August, 1886, and inclosed Memorandum.
2. Count Hatzfeldt's note verbale of the 1st September, 1886.
3. Sir E. Malet's No. 344 of the 14th September, 1887, and inclosed Memorandum.

That it would appear to be impossible, without some modification or extension of the wording of Article I of the Treaty above alluded to by Agreement between the High Contracting Parties, to carry out the desire of the Imperial German Government.

That there were, however, at least two precedents to be found in Extradition Treaties at present in force for the employment of a more comprehensive form of wording, which, if, having regard to the legal and political considerations involved, it were thought otherwise open to no objection, might probably meet the exigencies of the present case.

Precedents for modification of Treaty.

That by Article X of the Ashburton Treaty between Great Britain and the United States of the 9th August, 1842, provision was made for the extradition of persons who, being charged with the commission of certain offences therein mentioned within the jurisdiction of the one Contracting Party, should be found within the territories of the other party.

That immediately after the passing of "The Extradition Act, 1870," a General Draft Treaty was drawn up in consultation with the then Law Officers of the Crown for communication to foreign Governments.

That Article 1 of that General Draft was worded as follows:—

"It is agreed that Her Britannic Majesty . . . . shall, on requisition made in their name by their respective Diplomatic Agents, deliver up to each other reciprocally any persons, except native subjects of the party upon whom the requisition may be made, who, being accused or convicted of any of the crimes hereinafter specified, committed within the jurisdiction of the requiring party, shall be found within the territories of the other party."

That the first Treaty concluded after the passing of the Act, and on the basis of that General Draft, was that with Germany of the 14th May, 1872, the British draft of which followed the wording above given.

That the German counter-draft, however, contained Article I of the Treaty in its present form, viz.:—

"The High Contracting Parties engage to deliver up to each other those persons who, being accused or convicted of a crime committed in the territory of the one party shall be found within the territory of the other party, under the circumstances and conditions stated in the present Treaty."

And that that wording, which was agreed to by the Law Officers and the Home Office, was accepted by Her Majesty's Government, and had been adopted more or less in all the subsequent Extradition Treaties concluded by Great Britain, with the exception of that concluded with the Netherlands on the 19th June, 1874, which followed the terms of the original General Draft of March 1871, and provided for the extradition of persons accused or convicted of offences committed within the jurisdiction of the requiring party when they should be found within the territories of the other party.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to—

1. Whether the present proposition of the Imperial German Government would be met, as far as Her Majesty's Government were concerned, by the substitution for Article I of the Treaty of the 14th May, 1872, of an Article framed on the model of Article I of the original General Draft of March 1871; and
2. Whether, if so, we were aware of any legal objections to the adoption of such a course.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

Objection to proposed substitution for Article I of Treaty.

That we are not prepared to advise that the Treaty of the 14th May, 1872, should be modified by the substitution for Article I of an Article framed on the model of Article I of the original General Draft of March 1871.

Meaning of "jurisdiction."

It is true that the word "jurisdiction" was used in the Ashburton Treaty and in the Extradition Act of 1870 and in the General Draft Treaty prepared in pursuance of the Act; but a few years before the passing of that Act the Court of Queen's Bench had decided* (in Tivnan's case, 5 Best and Smith, 645) that "jurisdiction" meant "exclusive jurisdiction." On the assumption that it means "exclusive jurisdiction," its signification is not wider than that of "territory," and so there would be no result from the substitution of one word for the other.

On the other hand, the use of the word "jurisdiction" instead of "territory" might give rise to misconception.

For instance, under the Convention of 1852 between the United States and Prussia, which provided for the surrender of persons charged with having committed crimes within the "jurisdiction" of the one party who should be found within the "territories" of the other, a demand was made by Prussia on the United States for the surrender of a person alleged to have committed crimes in Belgium "within the legal jurisdiction of Prussia."

It was contended that inasmuch as such crimes were punishable by the laws of Belgium, the fugitive, being a subject of Prussia, was, by the laws of Prussia, subject to be punished for them in Prussia, and, there being no Extradition Treaty between Belgium and the United States, Prussia asked for his surrender to her. This view was adopted by Judge Blachford in the Circuit Court (see re Stupp, 11 Blachford, 124); but the Attorney-General for the United States did not concur in this opinion, but held that "jurisdiction" was a term convertible with "country," and the surrender was refused.

The Attorney-General's view was partly founded on a case in the year 1858 (see "Forsyth's Const. Law," p. 368), in which case the question was raised and submitted to the then Law Officers† whether a British subject who was charged with being accessory before the fact in this country to the murder of a Frenchman in Paris, and who had escaped to the United States, was a person charged with the crime of murder committed within British jurisdiction, whose surrender might be demanded under the Ashburton Treaty, and the opinion given by the then Law Officers was in the negative.

Suggested alteration undesirable. Questions should be dealt with separately.

We think that it would be undesirable to alter, in the way suggested, the Treaty of the 14th May, 1872, and that it would be better to deal separately with questions which arise with regard to extradition to or from Protectorates.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, April 17, 1888.

Grant of Marriage Warrants to Consul-General and Consul for the same town.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to submit to us, in connection with the Report on certain questions arising under "The Consular Marriage Act, 1849," with which we favoured your Lordship on the 10th March, a further point on which you were desirous of obtaining our opinion.

That the point in question seemed to turn upon the construction to be placed on section 19 of the Act, and had arisen for practical consideration with reference to the following facts:—

That Her Majesty, at present, possessed two Consular officers, both resident at Frankfurt-am-Main, viz., a Consul-General (Mr. Oppenheimer), and a Consul (Mr. Goldbeck).

That of those, the Consul-General was, by the terms of his Commission, appointed to reside at Frankfurt, but had a district assigned to him which embraced, as well as that town, the Province of Hesse Nassau, and also the Grand Duchies of Baden and of Hesse Darmstadt. That he was also provided with a Marriage Warrant.

That the Consul, on the other hand, had no district assigned to him, but was merely appointed to reside at Frankfurt.

That he was not himself provided with a Marriage Warrant, although he had frequently, during the absence of the Consul-General from his district, been Acting Consul-General, and had in that capacity performed marriages under the latter's Warrant in the ordinary course.

That both Consul-General and Consul were unpaid; and that the former, who was much occupied, was anxious, for his own convenience, that the latter should, if possible, be provided with a personal Marriage Warrant, in order that he might be able to celebrate marriages while he himself (the Consul-General) was either in Frankfurt or in some other part of his large district.

That at the same time the Consul-General did not wish, nor would it be thought desirable, that he should be deprived of his own Marriage Warrant in order to facilitate such an arrangement.

That section 19 of "The Consular Marriage Act, 1849," provided that "every British Consul-General and Consul . . . . appointed to reside in any foreign country or place, who shall be directed or authorized by writing under the hand of one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State to solemnize and register marriages, and any person duly authorized to act in the absence of such Consul, or, in any foreign place where there is no British Consul resident, any Vice-Consul or Consular Agent, who shall be directed or authorized as aforesaid . . . . to solemnize and register marriages in such place shall, in the country or place in which he is so appointed to reside, or in which he is directed or authorized to solemnize and register marriages as aforesaid, be a Consul duly authorized for all the purposes of that Act."

That the letter of the 1st February, and the papers which accompanied it, together our Report thereon of the 10th instant, were inclosed for reference, and that Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take them into our consideration with his letter of the 29th March, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether it was competent for you to issue a Marriage Warrant to the Consul at Frankfurt (assigning that town as his district for the purpose of solemnizing marriages) while the Consul-General continued to hold a Marriage Warrant for a district embracing the same town as such Consul, and both officials were appointed to reside in that same town.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Warrants in such a case may be issued.

That, in our opinion, it is competent to your Lordship to issue a Marriage Warrant to the Consul at Frankfurt, assigning that town as his district for the purpose of solemnizing marriages, although the Consul-General and Consul are both appointed to reside in the same town, and the Consul-General holds a Marriage Warrant for a district embracing such town.

Restriction as in case of Vice-Consul, &c., not applicable.

The restriction imposed by section 19 in the Act of 1849, in the case of the granting an authority to a Vice-Consul or Consular Agent, does not apply to a Consul.

Jurisdiction over foreigners in German Protectorates.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 19th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the legal position of the German Protectorates in South-west Africa, the South Seas, and elsewhere.

That that question had, as we were aware, been lately under discussion between the Imperial German Government and that of Her Majesty, and had already formed the subject of a considered Memorandum by ourselves with which we were good enough to favour your Lordship on the 29th June last.

Draft note to German Ambassador.

That after communication to, and consultation with, the Colonial Office (see Foreign Office to Colonial Office of the 22nd July, 1887, and Colonial Office to Foreign Office of the 10th August, 1887), a draft of a communication to be addressed to the German Ambassador at the Court of St. James' upon the subject was prepared in accordance with the terms of our Memorandum and with the observations contained in the Colonial Office letter of the 10th August last.

Memorandum on Articles as to status of German Protectorates.

That before, however, the terms of that draft (see inclosure in Foreign Office to Colonial Office of the 22nd December, 1887) were finally settled, a despatch was received from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Berlin (Sir E. Malet's No. 344A of the 14th September, 1887), forwarding a Memorandum drawn up by Mr. Scott, First Secretary to Her Majesty's Embassy, giving the substance of a series of articles which had appeared in the "Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung" on German Colonial State Law, defining the legal status of new German Protectorates and their organizations in accordance with principles of international law and the constitutional law of the German Empire.

Does it justify German claim?

That the question was now placed in a light somewhat different to that in which it was originally submitted to us in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 18th December, 1886, for it would seem that, if the particular character of the title asserted by Germany over these so-called Protectorates amounted to a suzerainty reducing the condition of the protected State to what had sometimes been called "mi-souveraineté," the claim on the part of that Government to exercise jurisdiction over the subjects of third Powers in the territories in question might possibly be justified. (See Calvo, "Dictionnaire Diplomatique," sub-titles, "Suzerain, Mi-Souverain, Mi-Souveraineté;" Bluntschli's "Droit International Codifié," sections 75-78; Vattel, by Pradier Fodéré, vol. i, cap. xvi, sections 192-194, p. 478; J. That before, therefore, addressing any further communication to the German Imperial Government upon the matter, your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion on the further point thus arising, together with any observations which we might desire to add upon the general aspect of the question.

That in case, however, we should see no ground for modifying the views expressed in our Report of the 29th June, 1887, your Lordship would be glad to be informed whether the draft of a note to the German Ambassador, inclosed in the letter from the Foreign Office to the Colonial Office of the 22nd December last, met with our approval.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Adhere to opinion. Approve draft note.

That we see no ground, in the matters now brought to our notice, for modifying or adding to our opinion of the 29th June, 1887; and we approve the draft despatch which it is proposed to send to the German Ambassador.

Annex.

*Draft of Letter to Count Hatzfeldt.

M. l'Ambassadeur, Foreign Office, , 1888.

WITH reference to the correspondence which has taken place respecting the right of civil and criminal jurisdiction over the subjects of foreign States in the German Protectorates in South-west Africa, the South Seas, and elsewhere, and especially to your Excellency's notes of the 11th May and the 29th August, 1886, I have the honour to submit the following observations for the consideration of the German Imperial Government.

In the month of August of last year Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Berlin was instructed to ascertain whether the State-protected German territories referred to in the Imperial Law on Jurisdiction of the 17th April, 1886, had become German territory, and formed part as such of the German Empire, and, if not, and they consequently remained foreign territory, to inquire whether, in the opinion of the German Imperial Government, a civilized State assuming the Protectorate of an uncivilized State could lawfully exercise jurisdiction over the subjects of other civilized States residing therein, without the assent of their respective Governments.

* This draft was, however, not sent to Count Hatzfeldt.

This important question was accordingly raised by Mr. Scott in a pro-memoriâ dated the 10th August, 1886, and on the 29th of the same month your Excellency delivered a note verbale of that date, containing the reply of your Government. From the explanations given in that note Her Majesty's Government understand that the territories comprised in the German Protectorates do not form part of the German dominions, but remain foreign territory under German suzerainty, and that the views of the German Imperial Government on the question raised are substantially as follows:—

That a Protectorate proclaimed in the name of His Majesty the Emperor of Germany is not in its terms limited to the persons residing or sojourning in the protected territory, but extends to the district itself, and accordingly has a territorial character.

That all persons being within such a Protectorate are, irrespectively of their nationality, subject to German jurisdiction, side by side with which the jurisdiction of any other State could not be exercised.

That the right of exercising jurisdiction in the Protectorates is based upon the fact that the protected territories are placed under the German suzerainty, and the exercise of supreme justice is not dependent upon the territories being declared parts of the German Empire, nor is the German supreme jurisdiction derived from the native Chiefs existing in the Protectorates.

That at the same time, on grounds of expediency, jurisdiction over the natives has in some cases been left by Treaty in the hands of their Chiefs.

That there can be no doubt as to the practical convenience of the view to which legislative sanction, as far as Germany is concerned, has been given by the German Imperial Law of the 17th April, 1886, that a country which has submitted to German protection, or to which, being an uncivilized place, German protection has been extended without any submission, becomes ipso facto subject to the Reichstag, and to the laws made by that body.

It seems, therefore, that the proposition contended for by the German Imperial Government is that it is competent to that Government to establish what may properly be called a Consular Protectorate in a foreign country, that is to say, a Protectorate in virtue of which the German Government, while not claiming the rights or accepting the liabilities of territorial sovereignty, maintain that the subjects of all other Powers become amenable to the jurisdiction of the officer appointed to administer such a Protectorate, and of the Tribunal of the Protectorate by which the Consular Court is replaced.

If such be the views of the German Imperial Government, Her Majesty's Government are unable to concur in them, and, in their opinion, they are not justified by the accepted principles of international law.

The particular form of the Protectorates in question is somewhat new to international relations, and no discussion of any such form of government can be found in the earlier writers upon international law. But the main principles which must be regarded are, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, well settled; one of these being that the right of jurisdiction over the persons found in any territory belongs only to the Power which is entitled to rights of territorial sovereignty. Those rights may be acquired by conquest, by cession, or by settlement, and where they exist, the Power which possesses them is clearly entitled to exercise jurisdiction over all persons coming within the limits of the territory, whether they be natives of such territory or the subjects (other than Diplomatic Representatives) of a foreign Power.

But no Power has any right, according to international law, to exercise jurisdiction over the subjects of another Power unless they are residing within its own territorial limits, neither can the municipal laws of any country affect or enlarge its rights under international law.

It would be competent for any civilized Power to obtain, by Treaty with a native Chief, jurisdiction within his territories over the subjects of other foreign civilized States resident within such territories; but the exercise of any such jurisdiction might be made the ground of diplomatic objection by the civilized State to whose subjects it was extended, and it should not, in the view of Her Majesty's Government, be exercised without the concurrence of that State, given generally, or in the particular case.

As regards the argument of the Imperial German Government, which is founded on the convenience of the view to which legislative sanction has been given by the German Law of the 17th April, 1886, a practical solution of the question may perhaps be found in a reciprocal agreement as to jurisdiction. If, as may be presumed, it is proposed to establish in the German Protectorates, and especially in German New Guinea, legal Tribunals to which foreign States can safely intrust the interests of their respective subjects, Her Majesty's Government would be prepared to assent to the exercise of jurisdiction over British subjects in German Protectorates, provided that a reciprocal jurisdiction may be exercised in British Protectorates over German subjects.

The question will not arise with respect to British New Guinea, as that territory will shortly be formally annexed to Her Majesty's dominions, when there will be competent legal officers appointed for the trial of grave cases, with an appeal in certain cases to the Supreme Court of Queensland. But in regard to the British and German Protectorates generally, I have the honour to submit to your Excellency, for the consideration of your Government, the expediency of concluding an arrangement based upon the above suggestion.

I have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received February 29.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, February 27, 1888.

Mr. D. Willoughby.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 9th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list,* with reference to the case of Mr. Digby Willoughby, a gentleman of British nationality, who occupied the rank of General in the Hova army, and had for some years past held a high position in the confidential employment of the Malagasy Government.

That Mr. Willoughby was last year deputed by that Government to proceed on a special diplomatic mission to Great Britain and the French Republic, and that on his return to Madagascar in June last a Commission of officers was appointed to receive from him an account of his mission.

Charges against him.

That that account was thought by the Commission to be so unsatisfactory that the Malagasy Government instituted a Court of Inquiry for the further investigation of the matter, of which Court various officers of high rank in the Malagasy army, including two gentlemen of British origin, Messrs. Shervington (Colonel) and Graves (Major) were members.

Tried and placed under arrest.

That Mr. Willoughby was by this Tribunal found guilty of having exceeded his powers as Ambassador, of disobeying orders, and of not satisfactorily explaining the business done by him in Europe on behalf of the Malagasy Government; and that he had been placed under military arrest for four months, the Malagasy Government stating that they reserved to themselves the right, if he should not at the expiration of that period produce a satisfactory statement of accounts, to proceed against him in a Civil Court.

Not enrolled as a British subject.

That Mr. Willoughby had never been enrolled upon the register of British subjects at the Consulate at Tamatave, and, by refusing and neglecting so to enrol himself, had, under section 30 of the Order in Council of the 17th May, 1867, forfeited all right to be recognized or protected as a British subject in respect to any suit, dispute, or difficulty in which he might have been involved within the dominions of the Queen of Madagascar, at any time when he should not have been so enrolled.

That he had, however, never formally renounced British nationality, nor, as was believed, had he made any attempt to become naturalized as a Malagasy subject.

That he, therefore, still remained in fact a British subject to whom, it was conceived, Her Majesty's Government had the right, though not the obligation, to extend Consular protection should they desire so to do.

* Print of correspondence, Confidential No. 5724; Consul Haggard, No. 1, January 9, 1888.

Question as to his protection.

That, having regard to Mr. Willoughby's previous history, and especially to the fact that he was charged by the Malagasy Government with various serious offences alleged to have been committed by him while he was actually in their military and civil employ, your Lordship was inclined to think that Her Majesty's Government could hardly insist on withdrawing him altogether from Malagasy jurisdiction, but that it occurred to your Lordship that they might fairly demand that Her Majesty's Consul should have free access to that gentleman, and be present at any proceedings which might be instituted against him, and be allowed to satisfy himself that he was being properly and humanely treated.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government were entitled to claim to extend their protection, and, if so, to what extent, to Mr. Willoughby in the circumstances mentioned.

That your Lordship would be glad at the same time to be favoured with any general observations which we might desire to offer upon the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

He may be protected.

That, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government are entitled to extend protection to General Willoughby notwithstanding his having failed to register himself as a British subject, and having actually entered the service of the Malagasy Government.

Proceedings properly carried out.

We do not, however, think it necessary that any demand should be addressed to that Government, as it appears to us that the proceedings instituted against General Willoughby have been properly instituted and conducted, and we see no sign of any desire on the part of the Malagasy Government to prevent General Willoughby having the full opportunity of defending himself.

Suggestion as to aiding him.

We do not doubt that the expression of a hope on the part of Her Majesty's Government that he should be allowed full intercourse with his friends and advisers would produce satisfactory assurances.

We have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received March 12.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, March 10, 1888.

Marriages performed in Consul's district, but not in his office.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 1st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin,* with reference to various questions which had arisen in connection with the celebration of marriages under the Consular Marriage Act by Her Majesty's Consul for Madagascar at certain places in that island other than his public office at Tamatave, the town in which he had been appointed to reside.

That of the marriages now more particularly in question, one was celebrated at Andovoranto, where Her Majesty possessed no Consular officer; and the remainder at Mahanoro, where the Unpaid Vice-Consul, who was, however, himself unprovided with a Marriage Warrant, resided.

That both places were within the Consular district assigned to Her Majesty's Consul for Madagascar, which extended over the whole of that island.

That it was believed that the parties to each of the marriages in question were British subjects, under no disability, and resident within the Consul's district, and that it was assumed that had they been celebrated at his Consulate at Tamatave no doubt as to their validity could have existed.

Instruction of 1853 in force.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was specially to draw our attention in that regard to the Circular instruction which, after having been carefully considered and settled by the then Queen's Advocate (Sir J. Dodson), was issued to Her Majesty's Consulates, &c., in 1853, and that Sir Julian Pauncefote was, at the same time, to mention that the views put forward in that Circular subsequently received the express approval of Sir Robert Phillimore (then Queen's Advocate) on the 4th June, 1867.

That that Circular despatch was still in force, and formed Annex 15 to the existing Consular Instructions, which were now undergoing revision with a view to the issue of an amended edition in connection with the new Consular Fee Tables of last year.

Previous case.

That there was, however, amongst the various Reports of our predecessors in office, one which appeared to be somewhat inconsistent with the views put forward in that instruction, and that it might, therefore, be advisable to allude to it in somewhat more detail.

That in January 1875 the then Law Officers were consulted as to whether Mr. Vivian, who had been appointed "Agent and Consul-General for the United Principalities of Moldavia and Wallachia, to reside at Bucharest," and whose district included the whole of the former Principality, although his own public office and official residence was situated at the capital of the latter State within the confines of what were then known as the Danubian Principalities, could legally celebrate a marriage at the Vice-Consulate at Jassy, in Moldavia, where the resident Vice-Consul was not furnished with a Marriage Warrant.

That they thereupon reported that Mr. Vivian, being Consul for Moldavia, and no directions being contained in the Warrant of the 25th November, 1874 (his Marriage Warrant), which would have the effect of limiting his authority, a marriage solemnized by him in Moldavia at Jassy would, in their opinion, be valid.

That it appeared from the terms of the reference, however, that the only two documents which were specifically brought to their notice were (1) Mr. Vivian's Commission, and (2) his Marriage Warrant, and that their attention was not called to the Circular instruction of 1853, nor to the Queen's Advocate's Report thereon of the 4th June, 1867. That their opinion, moreover, seemed itself to be confined rather to the terms of the Warrant than to be intended to deal with the validity of such a marriage in so far as it might be affected by the provisions of the Consular Marriage Act.

That other Reports of the Law Officers bearing on the subject were also inclosed, together with a copy of "The Consular Marriage Act, 1849" (12 & 13 Vict., cap. 68), to sections 3, 9, and 19 of which it was desired more particularly to draw our attention.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to—

Questions submitted.

1. Whether the marriages celebrated by Consul Haggard at Mahanoro and Andovoranto respectively, or either of them, were invalid in consequence of their not having been solemnized before that Consul in his own Consular office at Tamatave?

2. Whether the Consular instruction of the 20th August, 1853, was right and proper in its terms, or, if not, in what respects they might advantageously be amended?

3. Whether in cases where the same Consul possessed two Consular offices (as, for instance, where a town and its port were at some distance apart) marriages could be celebrated at both or only at one of such offices?

That your Lordship would be glad at the same time to be favoured with any general observations which we might desire to offer on the above points.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

1. A to validity of such marriages.

1. That, in our opinion, the marriages celebrated by Consul Haggard elsewhere than at the British Consulate are invalid, unless they were celebrated by a minister in Holy Orders, or are valid by the lex loci.

We understand that the only Consulate in Madagascar, that is to say, the only public office of the British Consul, is at Tamatave.

2. Instruction proper.

2. That the Consular instruction of August 1853 is right and proper in its terms.

3. Only one Consular office in each district.

3. That the terms of the Act of 1849 clearly contemplate one office of the Consulate, at which office the notice of marriage is to be exhibited, the register of notices is to be kept for public inspection, and the marriage itself is to be solemnized.

No doubt a Consul might be appointed to act for two districts, but we are of opinion that there can be only one office in each Consular district at which marriages can be lawfully celebrated.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received May 19.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, May 19, 1888.

Action brought in the Supreme Court of the Mauritius against M. Frouville d'Etienne by the New Oriental Bank Corporation.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 4th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list with reference to certain questions which had arisen in connection with an action brought in the Supreme Court of the Mauritius against a M. Frouville d'Etienne by the New Oriental Bank Corporation.

That the Judgment of the Supreme Court in the action in question was pronounced on the 9th August, 1886, and was in favour of the plaintiffs; the defendant, who was in Madagascar at the time, having made default of appearance at the trial.

That, on the 2nd March, 1887, a motion was made to the Supreme Court by the Counsel for the plaintiffs for an Order, addressed not only to all the competent officials of that Court in the Mauritius, but also "to all competent officers and proper persons to be appointed by the British Consul at Tamatave, commanding them forthwith to make and levy by distress and sale of such property of the defendant, Frouville d'Etienne, . . . . . then residing in Madagascar, having his place of business at Tamatave, in Madagascar, as might be levied upon, by the existing law of the Mauritius wheresoever the same might be found within the jurisdiction of that Court, and amongst other places at Tamatave, the sum of rupees 6,103 : 84," being the amount of the said Judgment, interest, and costs.

That, thereupon, the Supreme Court held "that, as the cause of action did not arise at Madagascar, the more regular course was for the plaintiff who obtained the Judgment to apply to the British Consul in Madagascar, in order that he should issue a writ of execution after the Judgment of the Court had been laid before him."

That it would be seen from Consul Haggard's despatch No. 136 of October 1887, that various applications had been made to him for the purpose of inducing him to execute the Judgment of the Mauritius Court; but that, on the ground that no precedent existed for such a proceeding, as well as for other reasons, he declined to serve the writ.

That it was presumed that, under ordinary circumstances, the usual and regular method of executing the Judgment of the Supreme Court of the Mauritius upon a defendant's property in Madagascar would be by bringing a further action upon such Judgment, when obtained, in the British Consular Court for Madagascar. (See Law Officers' Report, Morocco, No. 45 of 1886.)

That, in the present case, however, the Judgment of the Supreme Court was given in default of the appearance of the defendant, and that the latter was, moreover, not at the present time within the jurisdiction of the Consular Court.

That a copy of the Madagascar Order in Council of the 4th February, 1869, providing for the exercise of Her Majesty's Consular jurisdiction in that island, was inclosed, together with a copy of the Rules and Regulations framed thereunder of the 1st July, 1869.

That there appeared, however, to be nothing in that Order in Council, or in those Rules and Regulations empowering the Supreme Court of the Mauritius to make, or enabling the Consular Court of Madagascar to execute, when made, such an Order as that now under review, unless with reference to a matter which had come before them on appeal from a decision or Judgment of the Consular Court, and in which the Judgment of the Supreme Court became for that purpose the substituted Judgment of the Consular Court itself.

That Sir T. V. Lister was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to—

(1.) Whether the Supreme Court of the Mauritius had, with regard to actions originating in that Court, jurisdiction to order Her Majesty's Consuls in Madagascar to execute its Judgments.

(2.) Whether, assuming an action to be brought in the British Consular Court in Madagascar to enforce a previous Judgment of the Supreme Court of the Mauritius, the former could properly grant Judgment and execution thereof, notwithstanding that such previous Judgment was obtained against a defendant in default of his appearance, and that such defendant was also absent from Madagascar; and

(3.) With any general observations which we might desire to offer on the case.

We were also honoured with Sir J. Pauncefote's note of the 21st April, covering a copy of the Mauritius Order in Council of 1851, and copies of two Ordinances which had been made since that date in the Colony, viz., No. 14 of 1881 and No. 17 of 1884-85.

---

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Consuls in Madagascar not obliged to execute Judgments of Mauritius Court, but such Judgments may be made foundation of proceedings in Madagascar Court.

1. That, in our opinion, the Supreme Court of Mauritius has no jurisdiction to order Her Majesty's Consuls in Madagascar to execute the Judgments of the Mauritius Court in actions which originate in the Mauritius Court, but the Judgments of the Mauritius Court may be made the foundation of proceedings in the Madagascar Court.

If Her Majesty's Consul were to decline to entertain such proceedings, his refusal might be made the subject of appeal to the Mauritius Court.

Procedure in action brought in Madagascar Court on a Judgment of the Mauritius Court.

2. If an action be brought in the British Consular Court of Madagascar upon a Judgment of the Mauritius Court, the summons by which the action is commenced must be served upon the defendant in the manner prescribed, and, unless permitted by the lawful procedure of the Court, such summons cannot be served out of Madagascar. The fact that the defendant did not appear in the Mauritius Court will not of itself prevent the Court of Madagascar from pronouncing a Judgment in favour of the plaintiff, but it may affect the rights of the defendant as to the defence he may be entitled to raise in answer to the action on the Judgment.

Claim of Messrs. Procter on French Government for losses during recent hostilities.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by your Lordship's directions, the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the claim of Messrs. Procter, Brothers, to be indemnified by the French Government for losses which they sustained during, and consequently upon, the recent conflict between the French Republic and the Government of the Queen of Madagascar.

That the circumstances under, and the grounds upon, which the various items of which that claim was composed were alleged to arise, were concisely set out in the statement marked (A), which had, at the suggestion of your Lordship, been prepared by Messrs. Procter's solicitors.

That it would be seen that by Article VIII of the Treaty concluded between the Governments of the French Republic and of the Queen of Madagascar on the 17th December, 1885, the latter Government undertook to pay the sum of 10,000,000 fr. to be applied in the settlement of French claims liquidated before the conflict between the two parties, and in compensation for all the damages caused to foreign individuals by reason of that conflict.

That by the same Article the examination and settlement of those indemnities was left to the French Government.

That Article X of the Treaty, moreover, provided that no claim should be admitted in regard to the measures which had been taken up to the date thereof (17th December, 1885) by the French military authorities.

That the French Government had, as would be seen from the correspondence annexed, finally refused to recognize Messrs. Procter, Brothers', claim as valid, except to the extent mentioned in their letter to that firm of the 22nd November, 1887, informing them that the sum of 14,611 fr. had been awarded to them, and specifying the items of which that indemnity was composed.

That Messrs. Procter, Brothers, maintained, however, that certain portions of their claim which had been disallowed in toto by the French Government were equally well founded, and that a reversal of the decision in respect to those portions was demanded by justice and equity.

That the French Government, on the other hand, had pointed out that the decisions of the Indemnities Commission were, after ratification by the Administration, absolutely final, and that no means existed by which any appeal could be brought against them.

That Messrs. Procter, Brothers, considered that they were entitled to the support of Her Majesty's Government in respect of the claims mentioned in their statement, which they still maintained against the French Government, and that, in those circumstances, your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion as to whether they were entitled to that support to any, and, if so, to what extent, and on what grounds.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the question submitted in that letter, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

---

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Claim should not be supported.

That, in our opinion, Messrs. Procter, Brothers, are not entitled to the support of Her Majesty's Government in respect of the claims mentioned in their statement.

Interpretation of Treaty of 1885.

The Treaty of 1885 does not create, limit, or destroy any right to compensation on behalf of foreign subjects injured by the operations of the war. It is only an arrangement between two Powers by which one Power is to receive a certain sum of money which is to be applicable to the settlement of certain claims, and, so far as the Treaty goes, the absolute control over the distribution of that fund belongs to the French Government. No doubt, however, claims which, according to the rules of international law, could be maintained against either Power, cannot be rejected by the French Government so long as the fund is sufficient to satisfy them, and all claimants would be entitled to a reasonable equality of treatment.

Claims cannot be sustained according to international law.

In our opinion, none of Messrs. Procter's claims now in dispute can be sustained according to the rules of international law.

Mahasoa Estate.

1. The alleged loss on the Mahasoa estate did not arise from any act on the part of either belligerent upon which a claim could be founded and sustained.

The "Rob Roy."

2. The "Rob Roy" did not belong to Messrs. Procter, Brothers, but to a native trader, and the cargo which did belong to Messrs. Procter was delivered to them. Moreover, Messrs. Procter appear themselves to have left the cargo from May to July, and their present claim is in respect of the delay from July to September.

The "Latona."

3. It appears from Messrs. Procter's letter of the 20th February, 1888, that the French authorities did not refuse to allow the "Latona" to be dispatched to Mahanoro, but warned the agent as to the risk he would run by sending a cargo, the nature of which is not specified, to the enemy's port.

The "Eliza."

4. Claim in respect of the "Eliza." This claim is insignificant in amount, and no ground is sufficiently stated for recognizing it as sustainable against the French Government.

Claim of Messrs. Procter on French Government for losses during recent hostilities.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 18th July respecting Messrs. Procter's claim against the French Government on account of their operations in Madagascar, he was directed by your Lordship to submit to us, for approval, a draft of a reply, founded upon our Report above referred to, which had been drawn up for communication to Messrs. Procter.

That a doubt had, however, arisen as to whether, instead of communicating to them in detail the reasons on which the decision of Her Majesty's Government was founded (which might invite further discussion), it might not be preferable only to inform them that Her Majesty's Government, after consultation with the Law Officers of the Crown, had come to the conclusion that the facts were not such as could properly form the ground of a representation to the French Government.

That your Lordship would be glad to be informed whether the accompanying draft reply met with our approval, or whether we were of opinion that Messrs. Procter should be answered as above suggested, or in any other sense.

---

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Approve substance of draft, but the general answer suggested preferable.

That, in our opinion, the draft reply states adequately and correctly the grounds upon which Her Majesty's Government should decline to support Messrs. Procter's claims, but that it would be preferable to give Messrs. Procter the general answer suggested in Sir Thomas V. Lister's letter of the 31st ultimo.

Annex.

Draft of Letter to Messrs. Procter, Brothers.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, July , 1888.

I AM directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to state to you that your letter of the 20th February last, requesting the support of Her Majesty's Government to certain claims for compensation which you were of opinion you might prefer against the French Government on account of their operations in Madagascar, has received the careful consideration of Her Majesty's Government, and I am to return to you the following reply.

Treaty of 1885 has no effect on claims otherwise good by international law.

The Treaty of 1885 does not create, limit, or destroy any right to compensation on behalf of foreign subjects injured by the operations of the war. It is only an arrangement between two Powers, by which one Power is to receive a certain sum of money which is to be applicable to the settlement of certain claims, and, so far as the Treaty goes, the absolute control over the distribution of that fund belongs to the French Government. No doubt, however, claims which, according to the rules of international law, could be maintained against either Power cannot be rejected by the French Government so long as the fund is sufficient to satisfy them, and all claimants would be entitled to a reasonable equality of treatment.

Their claims cannot be sustained.

None of your claims now in dispute can be sustained according to the rules of international law.

Mahasoa estate.

The alleged loss on the Mahasoa estate did not arise from any act on the part of either belligerent upon which a claim could be founded and sustained.

"Rob Roy."

The "Rob Roy" did not belong to your firm, but to a native trader, and the cargo, which also did not belong to you, was delivered to you. Moreover, you appear to have left the cargo from May to July, and your present claim is in respect of the delay from July to September.

"Latona."

It appears from your letter above referred to that the French authorities did not refuse to allow the "Latona" to be dispatched to Mahanoro, but warned the agent as to the risk he would run by sending a cargo, the nature of which was not specified, to the enemy's port.

"Eliza."

With regard to your claim in respect of the "Eliza," it is insignificant in amount, and no ground is sufficiently stated for recognizing it as sustainable against the French Government.

I am to state that, for these reasons, Lord Salisbury regrets that he is unable to make a representation to the French Government on your behalf.

Proposed Treaty of Commerce with Mexico. Mexican additions to Articles IV and V.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 25th June last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, and in connection with the Treaty of Commerce now in course of negotiation between Her Majesty's Government and that of the Mexican Republic, the text of two additional paragraphs which the latter Government were desirous of adding to Articles IV and V of the draft Treaty respectively, and which they were pressing on the acceptance of Her Majesty's Government.

That the proposed additions in question were indicated in red ink* at the foot of Articles IV and V respectively, as printed upon the separate sheets marked 4 and 5.

That of the two additional paragraphs thus added to Article IV, we had already reported in effect with regard to that marked (B) in red ink,* that, in our judgment, no objection existed to its acceptance (Law Officers' Report of the 17th February, 1887), but that new matter was introduced by addition (A) to Article IV, and also by the addition to Article V, upon the legal aspect of which your Lordship desired to be favoured with our opinion.

Questions as to:—Closing of ports by mere Proclamation without effective blockade;

That with respect to addition (A) to Article IV, some doubt was felt as to whether it might not be held to give the right to Mexico to close by a mere Proclamation, and without any attempt at an effective blockade, any of her ports which, in time of civil war, might happen to have come into the de facto possession of rebels, a right which successive Administrations of Her Majesty had uniformly contested, and which Her Majesty's present Government would not be prepared to admit.

and position of British subjects under proposed Article V.

That it was conceived, moreover, that the addition to Article V, as at present worded, might place British subjects in Mexico at the mercy of any local legislation, however inconsistent it might be with the rights and immunities they could otherwise claim under international law.

That if that were not the effect which was aimed at by the Mexican Government, it was not easy to suggest with what object the clause had been proposed.

That previous correspondence and other papers bearing on the matter were also inclosed in case we might wish to refer to them.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether both or either of the additions proposed by the Mexican Government to Articles IV and V respectively of the draft Treaty were such as Her Majesty's Government could in their present or any modified form properly accept.

No objections to riders (A) and (B) if altered as suggested.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That as to rider (A), we see no objection to it, unless it be open to the construction suggested in the letter of Sir Julian Pauncefote of the 25th June.

In order to remove any doubt on this point, we would suggest that the last few words should read, "so long as they are, de facto, open to commerce."

Addition to Article V unobjectionable.

As to rider (B), we suggest the addition of the words referred to in our Report of the 17th February, 1887, "or of civil or criminal jurisdiction."

The proposed addition to Article V is, in our opinion, unobjectionable.

Annex 1.

ARTICLE IV.

Definition and treatment of vessels and cargoes. Most-favoured-nation-treatment.

British ships and their cargoes shall, in Mexico, and Mexican vessels and their cargoes shall, in the dominions and possessions of Her Britannic Majesty, from whatever place arriving and whatever may be the place of origin or destination of their cargoes, be treated in every respect as ships and cargoes of the most favoured nation.

The preceding stipulation applies to local treatment, dues, and charges in the ports, basins, docks, roadsteads, harbours, and rivers of the two countries, pilotage, and generally to all matters connected with navigation.

Every favour or exemption in these respects, or any other privilege in matters of navigation which either of the Contracting Parties shall grant to a third Power, shall be extended immediately and unconditionally to the other Party.

All vessels which, according to British Law, are to be deemed British vessels, and all vessels which, according to the Law of Mexico, are to be deemed Mexican vessels, shall, for the purposes of this Treaty, be respectively deemed British or Mexican vessels.

(A.) For the same purpose shall be considered as ports of each of the Contracting Parties those which are or hereafter may be declared open by the respective Governments for import or export trade, so long as they are de facto open to commerce.

(B.) The two Contracting Parties agree to consider as a limit of their territorial waters on their respective coasts the distance of three marine leagues reckoned fram the line of low-water mark. Nevertheless, this stipulation shall have no effect excepting in what may relate to the Coast-guard, and the application of the Custom-house Regulations and the measures for preventing smuggling, and cannot be extended to other questions of international law, or of civil or criminal jurisdiction.

Annex 2.

ARTICLE V.

Residential rights and privileges.

The subjects or citizens of each of the Contracting Parties shall be permitted to reside permanently or temporarily in the dominions or possessions of the other; and to occupy and hire houses and warehouses for purposes of commerce, whether wholesale or retail. They shall also be at full liberty to exercise civil rights, and therefore to acquire, possess, and dispose of every description of property, movable and immovable, as far as the laws of each country will permit. They may acquire and transmit the same to others, whether by purchase, sale, donation, exchange, marriage, testament, succession ab intestato, and in any other manner, under the same conditions as natives of the country. Their heirs and legal representatives may succeed to and take possession of it, either in person or by procurators, in the same manner and in the same legal forms as natives of the country.

In none of these respects shall they pay upon the value of such property any other or higher impost, duty, or charge than is payable by natives of the country. In every case the subjects or citizens of the Contracting Parties shall be permitted to export their property, or the proceeds thereof if sold, freely and without being subjected on such exportation to pay any duty different from that to which natives of the country are liable under similar circumstances.

The citizens or subjects of each one of the High Contracting Parties who may be residing, temporarily or permanently, in the dominions and possessions of the other, are subject to the laws of the country where they reside, especially to those which determine the rights and obligations of foreigners on the same conditions as those of the citizens and subjects of the most favoured nation.

No. 36.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received April 18.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, April 17, 1888.

Exclusive Moorish jurisdiction in cases involving real property.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, and together with other papers bearing thereon, a despatch (No. 4 of the 7th February, 1888)* which had lately been received from Her Majesty's Consul at Tangier, raising some doubt as to the exclusive competency of the Moorish Tribunals of that place to adjudicate upon a particular case therein mentioned, and applying to your Lordship for further instructions upon the subject.

That by the Convention signed at Madrid on the 3rd July, 1880, to which Great Britain and the other Great Powers were parties, the right of all foreigners to hold property in Morocco was recognized.

That it was, however, provided (see Article XI, paragraph 3) that any question which might arise respecting such right should be decided "according to Moorish law;" and that that last proviso had been generally interpreted to mean that all questions relating to the title and tenure of real property should be heard and determined not merely according to Moorish law, but also by a Moorish Court, while Her Majesty's Government in particular had been guided by the opinion expressed to that effect by the then Law Officers of the Crown on the 15th December, 1881.

That the special point which arose for consideration upon the Consul's despatch appeared to be whether, in a suit brought to restrain a British subject, the owner of an adjoining property, from opening out a window overlooking his neighbour's house (a proceeding which was forbidden by Moorish law as being calculated to violate the privacy of harems), the plaintiff could elect to sue, or the defendant to be sued, in the British Consular Court, or whether the proceedings, as involving a right claimed to be exercised over one plot of real property in respect of the possession of another, were not within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Moorish Tribunals.

That the Chief Justice of Gibraltar had, as would be seen from Consul White's despatch, been good enough to give him informal assistance and advice with reference to the points involved; and that, in considering the case generally, the views of that Judge would doubtless not escape our attention.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers Exclusive jurisdiction of Moorish Courts.

That we agree with the opinion given by the Law Officers in December 1881. Claim of North-west African Company on Sultan in event of forcible incorporation of their property. Request for protection and assistance.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to a claim which had been put forward by the North-west African Company to the active assistance and support of Her Majesty's Government in claiming compensation from the Sultan of Morocco, if he should incorporate the property claimed by them in his territory by virtual force of arms.

That the Company in question was formed some ten years since for the purpose of developing British trade in regions hitherto untouched by British merchants on the North-west Coast of Africa; and that they eventually selected Cape Juby as the most suitable spot upon the coast to serve as a basis for their operations.

That the legal position in which the Company stood in 1886 with regard to their occupation of Cape Juby, and which was still practically unchanged, was set forth in the inclosed Memorandum, which had been drawn up by Mr. Davidson; and that two Memoranda were also inclosed, which had been drawn up by Sir J. D. Hay, formerly Her Majesty's Minister at Tangier, which contained much information with regard to the relations which had hitherto existed between the Sultan of Morocco and the Company; and also dealt with the negotiations, which at that date were about to be entered upon at Morocco, for a settlement of the question between the Sultan and the representatives of the Company.

That those negotiations having failed, the present phase of the question appeared to be as follows:—

Also claim for attack on their Settlement and murder of Mr. Morris.

That the North-west African Company contended, for reasons which were set forth at length in their letters of the 12th and 28th July and the 16th August, 1887, that they were entitled to the active protection and assistance of Her Majesty's Government in the event of incorporation into Morocco, and that we should perceive from a more recent letter received from them (the 23rd April, 1888), that an attack had been delivered against their settlement resulting in loss of life, but whether the assailants were merely irresponsible robbers or emissaries of the Sultan was not at that time ascertainable.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the position of the Company at Cape Juby was such as entitled them to the active support and assistance of Her Majesty's Government; and also whether, if it should be clearly ascertained that the recent outrage was committed by persons under the authority and control, or acting at the instigation of, the Sultan, Her Majesty's Government could legally insist upon His Highness giving adequate redress and compensation to the Company in question.

That your Lordship would be glad, at the same time, to be favoured with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We were also honoured with a Memorandum from Sir Julian Pauncefote, dated the 5th instant, covering a letter of the 4th May, which had been received from the North-west African Company, giving details of the recent assault by Moorish soldiers on the Company's employés at Cape Juby which resulted in the murder of Mr. Morris, and stating that he was to request that that letter might be taken into consideration with the papers already forwarded from the Foreign Office on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

Cannot support claim, as Company's factory is not exempt from authority, &c., of Sultan.

Company entitled to protection against aggression.

That, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government cannot properly support the claim of the Company, that their factory is exempt from the jurisdiction and authority of the Sultan of Morocco. The Company is, however, entitled to the protection of Her Majesty's Government against violent aggression upon the persons and property at such factory, but has no rights which it can set up against that which the Sultan of Morocco possesses of regulating as he pleases, without regard to the interests of the Company, the trade and commerce of Morocco.

May remonstrate as to attack.

The evidence that the affray which occurred on the 25th March resulted from the action of persons whose conduct was authorized or instigated by the Sultan appears to us to be very slight. If this were proved, Her Majesty's Government would be called upon to insist that reparation should be made, and, even in the absence of such proofs, we are of opinion that remonstrances may properly be addressed to the Sultan, and that he should be called upon to investigate and, if necessary, to punish the conduct of which his soldiers are alleged to have been guilty.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received June 15.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, June 14, 1888.

Application of Mr. Grant, a Mussulman, married according to Moorish law, for registration as British subjects of his children born in Morocco.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list,* with reference to an application which had lately been made to Mr. Frost, the British Vice-Consul at Rabat, in Morocco, to enrol in the Register of his Vice-Consulate as British subjects two children born at that place under the following circumstances:—

That the father of the children (who were aged 4 and 2 years respectively) was a British subject named Grant, who, while retaining his British nationality, had formally embraced the Mahommedan faith, and, in compliance with the rites of that religion, and with all the requirements of the Moorish law, had contracted a marriage, of which those children were the offspring, with a native Mussulman woman.

That Mr. Grant had, as yet, only contracted the marriage above alluded to, and that, although that union might doubtless from one aspect be properly described as partaking of a polygamous nature, he was not at present living in a state of polygamy.

That it was, however, competent for him, at any moment during the duration of the union of which those children were born, to contract other marriages with one or more Mussulman women which would, according both to the Mahommedan religion and the Moorish lex loci contractûs, be of equal validity with his first marriage.

That Her Majesty's Consular officers abroad having been instructed (see Circular instruction of the 29th May, 1876) that the illegitimate children of British parents born abroad were not British subjects, and therefore should not be registered as such, Mr. Frost, who entertained some doubt as to whether those children were to be considered as illegitimate or not, had applied for further instructions with respect to the case.

That, with reference to the legal status of the children in question, Sir Julian Pauncefote was to refer us to the Judgment delivered on the 15th February last by Mr. Justice Stirling in the Baralong marriage case, and reported at length in the "Times" newspaper of the following day. (See also L. R., Chancery Division, vol. xxxviii, p. 220.)[*]

That it was understood, on the authority of counsel engaged in the case, that no appeal was pending, or would be brought, against the decision of Mr. Justice Stirling.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was also to call our attention, as bearing, though less directly, upon the subject, to the cases of Warrender v. Warrender (2 Clarke and Finelly's House of Lords Reports, p. 488), and Hyde v. Hyde and Woodmansee (L. R., 2 Probate and Divorce Division, p. 130); and also to the inclosed Report of the then Law Officers dated the 10th June, 1869.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the instructions which should be sent to Sir William Kirby Green with reference to the application addressed by Mr. Grant to Vice-Consul Frost to register as British subjects the children in question, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

The children not to be registered, as, by British law, the marriage is polygamous.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, Sir William Kirby Green should be directed [Qy. "to instruct Mr. Frost"] to refuse to register as British subjects the children of Mr. Grant by his marriage according to the Mahommedan faith with a Moorish Mussulman woman, such marriage being of a polygamous character, and therefore not recognized by British law.

NETHERLANDS.

No. 39.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received March 1.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, February 29, 1888.

Mr. Godden's claims on account of conduct of the Curaçao authorities.

Former Report. No case except as to 1st and 5th heads.

That those claims, which might conveniently be divided under five heads, formed the subject of a previous reference to us on the 9th March of last year, and that we, in effect, reported, on the 30th of the same month, that in respect of the 2nd, 3rd, and 4th heads of claim Mr. Godden had no case, and that, while the action of the Dutch Colonial authorities—as set out in his 5th head of complaint—appeared to have been unjustifiable and to require explanation, it was, in our opinion, only with regard to the 1st head of claim that any substantial question arose.

That with regard to that particular question we were, however, unable to agree with M. de Brauw, an eminent member of the Netherland Bar, who had previously been consulted, as an expert in Dutch law, by Her Majesty's Government, and whose opinion was unfavourable to Mr. Godden on that as on all his other heads of complaint, but that we considered, on the contrary, that any reasonable claim for compensation in that respect put forward by Mr. Godden was entitled to the support of Her Majesty's Government.

[*] The case was reported in the June number of the Law Reports, after we had sent off our reference to the Law Officers, but I wrote privately to the Attorney-General calling their attention to the fact.—W. E. D.

That in accordance with the views indicated in our Report Her Majesty's then Minister at the Hague (Sir William Stuart) was instructed to make a representation to the Netherland Government on Mr. Godden's behalf, and that on the 7th May, 1887, he addressed a note to the Dutch Foreign Minister, M. de Karnebeek, to the terms of which, as well as to the reply of M. de Karnebeek thereto of the 23rd September last, Sir Julian Pauncefote was particularly to call our attention.

That meanwhile Mr. Godden had continued from time to time to forward various other papers in support of his contentions, and that he subsequently transmitted to your Lordship a detailed and favourable report upon the merits of his case from Dr. Ramaer, a Dutch advocate who for some years held the office of Attorney-General for the Island of Curaçao, but who had been consulted by Mr. Godden, in his private capacity, after he had ceased to fill that position.

That it was therefore thought desirable, in the first instance, to submit the papers to M. de Brauw once more; and to ask him whether his opinion as already expressed was in any way modified, either by any new matter then brought to his notice, or by the legal arguments advanced by Dr. Ramaer, and at the same time to request him to report generally upon the case in its then aspect.

That M. de Brauw had since reported (to Sir W. Stuart, 12th January, 1888) in detail, and maintained, on all the principal points of the case, his original opinion in its entirety.

That with respect to the 5th head of Mr. Godden's complaint, viz., the refusal, in March 1886, of the provisional custodian of the archives in Curaçao to make and deliver to him copies of certain mortgage deeds which were in his custody as Archivist, it appeared that that gentleman was unable to prove that any substantial injury resulted to him from the mistake of the official in question.

Satisfactory explanations as to 5th head, refusal of copies of mortgages.

That the Netherland Government had, moreover, now offered explanations which tended to show that Mr. Godden did not avail himself of his proper legal remedy, and had at the same time expressed regret for the mistake of the Archivist in suitable terms.

That your Lordship was therefore inclined to think that Her Majesty's Government might properly accept those explanations as being reasonable and satisfactory under the circumstances, and that, subject to any observations on that point which we might be good enough to offer, and which might serve to modify that view, your Lordship proposed to inform the Netherland Government to that effect.

As to action on 1st head regarding the working of minerals by the Aruba Company.

That with reference, however, to the more substantial grievance raised under the 1st head of Mr. Godden's claim, the question now arose as to what further steps (if any), by way of protest or otherwise, it was either competent to, or desirable for, Her Majesty's Government to adopt, having regard more especially to the terms of the reply of the Netherland Government to the representation which Her Majesty's Government had already addressed to them upon the subject.

That Her Majesty's Government had hitherto governed their action in cases of a similar kind by the rule that diplomatic interference with respect to a matter which was res judicata was only admissible in re minime dubiâ, and that unless we should be clearly of opinion that Mr. Godden's 1st head of complaint came within that category, your Lordship was disposed to think that further interference on the part of Her Majesty's Government might be, under all the circumstances, somewhat impolitic.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was accordingly to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion, more particularly on the two questions submitted in that letter, and, at the same time, with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

The working of minerals a question of Dutch law.

That we have carefully considered the further opinion of M. de Brauw, and the opinions obtained by Mr. Godden from Dr. Ramaer. Upon the most important question, namely, whether the Concession held by Mr. Godden reserved to the Government the minerals, including the phosphate of lime, seeing that the question is one of the terminology of Dutch law, and that Dr. Ramaer does not appear to differ from M. de Brauw on this point, we are not disposed to advise Her Majesty's Government to act otherwise than in accordance with M. de Brauw's opinion.

No further diplomatic action as to conduct of Aruba Company necessary.

If the Aruba Company has acted in excess of the rights given them by the Concession, their so doing constitutes a wrong for which they may be sued, but for which the Dutch Government is not responsible. We therefore advise that upon this point, as well as upon that of the refusal to supply copies of the register, the explanations of the Dutch Government should be accepted, and no further diplomatic action taken.

PACIFIC ISLANDS.

No. 40.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received April 12.)

Royal Courts of Justice, April 10, 1888.

My Lord,

Issue of licences to work unclaimed guano islands in the Pacific.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 3rd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the issue to British subjects of Crown leases or licences to dig for, and take away, guano or minerals in and from certain uninhabited islands situated chiefly in the Western Pacific Ocean, to which no foreign Power laid claim, but which, in some cases, had not, previous to the issue of such licences by the Crown, been considered to form part of Her Majesty's dominions.

That those licences had been issued for places within the boundaries respectively laid down in Her Majesty's Letters Patent of the 10th June, 1868, and 19th July, 1869, either by the Government of New South Wales or the High Commissioner of the Western Pacific, as the case might be, under the authority of those Letters Patent respectively; while in places outside such limits they had been issued by the Secretary of State for the Colonies, acting under the authority of the Warrant of the 15th September, 1881,[*] which was prepared by the Law Officers of the Crown, at the instance of the Treasury, to which Department any rents reserved by the licences in question were paid.

That numerous applications for such licences had been of late received, and that before dealing with them your Lordship would be glad to learn whether the form of licence adopted by the Colonial Office met with our approval.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was also to draw our attention to the fact that, although each of those islands would, according to the Report of the then Law Officers of the Crown of the 20th January, 1880,[†] immediately upon its occupation under the licence, and on the hoisting of the British flag by the licensee, become part of the Queen's dominions, Her Majesty would at present possess no means of exercising any legal jurisdiction therein.

That it was suggested by the Colonial Office that that difficulty might possibly be met by passing a short Act declaring that offences committed upon any British island not within the jurisdiction of the Court of any British possession should be held to have been committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty, in which event the offender would be rendered justiciable by any Colonial Court.

That it appeared to your Lordship, however, that the provisions of "The British Settlements Act, 1887," might sufficiently meet the case.

Questions as to:—

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to—

1. Form of licence.

1. Whether, having regard to all the circumstances, the form of licence[‡] adopted by the Colonial Office was suitable for the purpose in view.

2. Jurisdiction.

2. Whether the course suggested by the Colonial Office for enabling Her Majesty to exercise jurisdiction in those islands met with our approval, or whether that object could be sufficiently attained under the provisions of "The British Settlements Act, 1887" (50 & 51 Vict., cap. 54).

That your Lordship would be glad, at the same time, to be favoured with any further general observations which we might desire to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

Disapprove form of licence.

That we have grave doubts as to the propriety of granting licences in the form submitted to us.

Islands occupied under licence are British territory.

We agree with the Report of our predecessors, dated the 21st March, 1880, that "when a licence, in the form adopted under the present system, has been granted by Her Majesty, and the licensee has occupied the island to which the licence applies and notified his occupation by hoisting the British flag, the island in question becomes part of Her Majesty's dominions, and will remain part of such dominions so long as Her Majesty shall find it expedient to retain the sovereignty thereof."

As to granting licences for islands out of British dominions.

The Letters Patent of the 10th June, 1868, and the 19th July, 1879, authorize dispositions of islands and other places belonging to Her Majesty, her heirs, and successors. The Warrant of the 15th September, 1881, only authorizes the dealing with lands vested in Her Majesty by virtue of the Royal prerogative, and subject to alienation at her pleasure. Neither the Governor of New South Wales nor the High Commissioner of the Western Pacific, under their respective Letter Patent, nor the Secretary of State, under his Warrant, has, in our opinion, any power to grant licences as to islands which have not become part of Her Majesty's dominions.

As long as the Letters Patent and Warrant are limited as at present, the form of licence should be amended so as to conform with the powers contained in the Letters Patent and Warrant respectively.

We think it desirable that the use of the British flag should be required, so as to show the continuous occupation as a part of the dominions of Her Majesty.

If it is desired to grant licences with respect to islands or territories of which no possession has ever been taken, or which do not form part of Her Majesty's dominions, the licences should authorize and empower the licensee to take and hold possession on behalf of Her Majesty, and the use of the British flag should be enjoined.

1888

Letters Patent or Warrants authorizing the grant of such licences should be made, or issued, if necessary.

British Settlements Act, 1887, authorize jurisdiction.

2. We are of opinion that the provisions of "The British Settlements Act, 1887," are sufficient to enable jurisdiction to be exercised, and that further legislation is not needed.

PERSIA.

No. 41.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received August 11.)

(Confidential.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, August 11, 1888.

Right of British steamers to navigate the Karun River.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 20th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the correspondence noted in the margin,* and to request our opinion as to the question raised therein of the right of British steamers to navigate the Karun River.

That Her Majesty's Government had for many years past repeatedly urged the Shah of Persia to throw this river open to steam navigation, but hitherto without success.

That His Majesty had, in strict confidence, stated that his principal reason for refusing to take that step was that it would give rise to claims on the part of Russia to some concessions, not very clearly defined, in the north of Persia.

Privileges granted to Turkish vessels.

That Sir H. Drummond Wolff, Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran, had reported that a large number of Turkish merchant-vessels of from 5 to 70 tons burthen navigated the Karun without restrictions, and that he had suggested that, under Article IX of the Treaty between Great Britain and Persia of the 4th March, 1857, British vessels, whether steamers or sailing-ships, might claim the same privilege.

That the Article in question was as follows:—

British right to m.-f.-n. treatment.

"The High Contracting Parties engage that in the establishment and recognition of Consuls-General, Consuls, Vice-Consuls, and Consular Agents, each shall be placed in the dominions of the other on the footing of the most favoured nation; and that the treatment of their respective subjects and their trade shall also, in every respect, be placed on the footing of the treatment of the subjects and commerce of the most favoured nation."

Privileges not granted to Turkish steamers.

That the suggestion had been communicated to Mr. Mackenzie, of the firm of Gray, Dawes, and Co., who were interested in the question. That he stated that the Turkish vessels referred to by Sir H. Wolff were in fact open native grain and cargo boats of the nature of lighters; that British merchants were equally allowed to send boats of that kind up the river; but that to the best of his knowledge none of the Turkish river steamers, of which there were four in the Shat-el-Arab at Bussorah, had ever been allowed to ascend the Karun.

Question as to claiming rights for British steamers.

That such being the state of the case, it was of material importance, in deciding the course to be pursued, to consider whether Her Majesty's Government were entitled to claim, under Article IX of the Treaty of 1857 above referred to, that British merchant-steamers had legally the right to enter and navigate the Karun on the ground that Turkish grain-boats and lighters were so admitted, and that the Persian authorities could not, in view of the stipulations of the Treaty, draw any distinction between different classes of vessels employed in the commerce of the two countries.

Regulations on the Tigris.

That it was to be observed, in connection with that question, that in the Tigris the Turkish authorities, while imposing no restrictions on the use of similar native craft by British and Persian traders, limited the steamers employed by Messrs. Lynch and Co. to two, and would not, according to Mr. Mackenzie's statement, permit the use of foreign-built barges to be towed by those steamers.

That upon that point it might be useful to us to refer to the inclosed Reports of the Law Officers of the Crown.

Distinction between foreign and native vessels.

That there seemed no doubt that in practice a distinction had been made in the Karun and in the neighbouring Turkish rivers between native craft and foreign-built vessels and steamers, and that the question upon which your Lordship desired to have our opinion was whether there were good grounds for contending that the practice, as far as the Karun was concerned, was contrary to the Treaty engagements of Persia towards this country.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to report—

Treaty fulfilled by grant of rights equal to the Turkish. Cannot claim opening of river to steamers.

That, in our opinion, the Treaty engagements of Persia towards this country are fulfilled by the permission to British traders to use on the Karun similar vessels to those employed by Turkish subjects, and that Great Britain is not, under the existing state of circumstances, entitled to claim that that river should be open to steam navigation.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, September 24, 1888.

Seizure of Mr. Arsenian's property.

His protest against decision of Persian Courts at Constantinople.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir P. Currie's letter of the 28th ultimo, requesting that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion upon the papers transmitted therewith relating to the case of Mr. Arsen Arsenian, a naturalized British subject of Persian nationality of origin, whose property had been made the subject of litigation in the Persian Consular Court at Constantinople, and who protested against the decisions of that Court and of the Court of Appeal therefrom.

That Mr. Arsenian had received the unofficial support of Her Majesty's Representatives at Constantinople and Tehran under circumstances which were very clearly set forth

* Sir H. Drummond Wolff, No. 91, Telegraphic, of 1888 (Confidential No. 5665, p. 96), Nos. 95, 98, and 103, Telegraphic, of 1888 (Confidential No. 5695, pp. 3, 7, and 10); to Sir H. Drummond Wolff, No. 38, Telegraphic, of 1888 (Confidential No. 5695, p. 9); Treaty, Great Britain and Persia, March 4, 1857, No. 420; Mr. Mackenzie, July 9. 1888 (Confidential No. 5695, p. 8), and July 16, 1888; Law Officers, November 18, 1881 (Confidential No. 4637, p. 98); Law Officers, April 9, 1884 (Confidential No. 5121, p. 123).

in the preamble of the Report of our predecessors of the 24th February, 1885 (document A, No. 6).

That it would be seen that the opinion with which that Report concludes is to the effect that Mr. Arsenian might, "under the circumstances, properly be left to prosecute an appeal to Tehran under British protection."

Request for official assistance at Tehran.

That it had, however, been represented by Messrs. Fox, Mr. Arsenian's solicitors, that nothing short of strong official pressure by Her Majesty's Legation at Tehran would be efficacious, and Sir Ronald Thomson, lately Her Majesty's Minister in Persia, had expressed his opinion that of the three alternatives proposed by the Persian Government in 1884, only the third, viz., reinvestigation of the whole case at Tehran, was now practicable, and that there would be no advantage in Mr. Arsenian's proceeding to Tehran to prosecute his claim unless a previous understanding had been come to with the Shah as to the way in which the case should be investigated and decided.

That it had become necessary, therefore, to examine the papers in the case, and to ascertain whether they show such a denial of justice as would justify diplomatic intervention by Her Majesty's Government on Mr. Arsenian's behalf.

That for that purpose the material papers had been printed, and two copies were inclosed with Sir P. Currie's letter, arranged as far as possible in order of sequence (document B).

That the collection contained—

1. Original Petition and Decree of the Persian Consular Court at Constantinople in February and March 1880.
2. Judgment of the same Court, May 1881.
3. Judgment of the Persian Court of Appeal at Constantinople, January 1882.
4. Report by Lord Dufferin, then Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, and by Mr. Consul-General and Judge Fawcett, on certain subsequent discussions between the advocates of the two parties.
5. Statements by Messrs. Fox, Mr. Arsenian's solicitors, with some supplementary papers, and in particular (Inclosures 7 and 8 in No. 5) a short history of the case and observations and criticisms upon the Judgments of the Persian Courts.

History of the case.

That it would be seen from the recitals of the Judgments that in 1872 Oskian Arsenian, the father of the present applicant, being at the time in partnership with Azarik Asfasadourian, took his son, Arsen Arsenian, also into such partnership.

That at the end of the year 1874 Azarik retired from the firm, and the business was carried on by Oskian and Arsen Arsenian as sole partners, under the name of Oskian Arsenian and Son.

That in July 1878, while Oskian Arsenian was residing in Constantinople, certain members of his family obtained a decision of the Medical Council of Constantinople declaring him to be of unsound mind, his insanity being attested by certificates signed by Dr. Mongéry, of Constantinople, and others, and alleged to date from the year 1877 (see the recital of the proceedings given at the beginning of the Judgment of the Persian Consular Court, document B, p. 2, and also document B, p. 31, Inclosure 7 in No. 5, paragraphs 5-7).

That in October of the same year Oskian Arsenian left Constantinople in company of his son, Arsen Arsenian, and the latter endeavoured, though unsuccessfully, to obtain from Dr. Leidersdorff, of Vienna, a certificate of Oskian's sanity. While at Vienna he states that Oskian signed a deed, dated the 19th November, 1878, dissolving the partnership from the 31st December, 1877, and constituting Arsen Arsenian sole proprietor of the business and the premises appertaining to it.

That that deed was said to have been subsequently destroyed (see note 91, foot of p. 45); but on arrival in England a subsequent deed to the same effect was executed, bearing date the 21st February, 1879, a notice of the dissolution of partnership having already been inserted in the "London Gazette" on the 6th December, 1878, and official notification having been given of it on the 22nd January, 1879, to the Persian authorities through the British Consular Court at Constantinople.

That at the same time, in consequence of the endeavours being made at Constantinople by the Turkish authorities to sequestrate Oskian Arsenian's share in the business, Arsen Arsenian took steps to establish his father's sanity by having him examined by several eminent English physicians, and, as a result of these examinations, the Persian Legation gave a certificate of sanity, dated the 23rd February, 1879 (document B, p. 29, Inclosure 3 in No. 5).

That at that time the Persian Consulate at Constantinople is stated to have resisted the claim of the Turkish authorities on the ground that Oskian Arsenian was not insane (document B, p. 30, inclosure 5 in No. 5). But the despatches or Memoranda to that effect had not been produced, and the records of them at the Persian Consulate were said to be missing (document B, p. 27 and p. 39, foot-note). The knowledge of their contents, therefore, is on hearsay, and depends, moreover, on statements of an ex parte nature. In February 1880 certain members of Oskian Arsenian's family petitioned the Persian Ambassador at Constantinople for a Decree of Lunacy (document B, No. 1).

The Persian Consular Court, to which the Petition was referred, issued a Decree on the 11th March (ibid.), whereby Oskian was declared insane, and the whole of his property was placed in the custody and control of a trustee, including the warehouse where the business was carried on, and which was, at that time, in the possession of Arsen Arsenian, but alleged by the petitioners to belong to Oskian. It was also ordered (paragraph 15) that Oskian should be brought before the Court, but he died in January 1881, without that order having been complied with.

That in the meantime Arsen Arsenian had petitioned the Persian Consular Court at Constantinople to set aside the Decree of Lunacy and recognize his claim to the warehouse.

That the Court, after hearing both parties, and decreeing an examination of the ledgers of the firm, pronounced judgment on the 16th May, 1881, confirming the Decree of the 11th March, 1880, condemning the petitioner in costs, and allowing him only that share of the property of his father which would come to him by operation of law as one of the "heirs" (document B, No. 2).

That against that Judgment Arsen Arsenian appealed, but it was again confirmed by the Persian Court of Appeal at Constantinople in an elaborate Judgment on the 9th January, 1882 (document B, No. 3).

That in the course of that Judgment (p. 23) reference was made to two letters written by Arsen Arsenian to his brother Onik on the 20th January and 30th May, 1877, in which he admitted that his father was subject to hypochondria and chronic melancholia, but prescribed absolute secrecy on the subject; and it was further stated (same page), that Sir James Paget's certificate of Oskian's sanity was qualified by the expression that he believed him to be sane so far as he could judge of a man of whose language he was ignorant.

That it also appeared from the evidence recited in the Judgment of the Consular Court of First Instance (document B, p. 10) that in 1874, when Azarik Asfasadourian left the firm, Oskian Arsenian's capital was stated in the ledgers to be £ T. 8,199, or about 7,300*l.*, whilst Arsen's share of the capital was only 1*l.* 14*s.*, and that when the partnership between Arsen and his father was finally dissolved the former agreed to pay back to his father a sum of 7,300*l.*, with 6 per cent. interest, in instalments (see p. 33).

That the whole capital of the business was valued at 18,000*l.*, of which 10,000*l.* at Constantinople and 8,000*l.* in England (see also p. 26).

That there was no record of any portion of that sum of 7,300*l.* having been paid by Arsen Arsenian to his father; nor was it stated what had become of the 8,000*l.* capital in Manchester which the Persian Court at Constantinople could not attach, but it was implied that that money had been lost and Arsen Arsenian reduced to poverty by the stoppage of the business.

That the latter had come to an arrangement with his English creditors, who refused to put in claims through the British Consulate-General at Constantinople.

That further it would appear that the family had offered to accept 4,500*l.* from Arsen Arsenian as their share of the estate, but that that compromise fell through (document B, p. 26 A).

That the papers had been perused by Mr. Tarring, Assistant Judge of the Supreme British Consular Court at Constantinople, and his Memorandum upon them was inclosed.

That Sir P. Currie was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the circumstances were such as to justify diplomatic intervention in favour of Mr. A. Arsenian on the ground of denial or miscarriage of justice, or on any other grounds, and generally as to the answer which might properly be returned by your Lordship to the last communication from Mr. Arsenian's solicitors.

That the volume of the previous correspondence in the case was forwarded for purpose of reference if required.

1888

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Diplomatic intervention not justified.

That, in our opinion, the circumstances are not such as to justify diplomatic intervention on behalf of Mr. A. Arsenian.

Answer as to assistance in case of an appeal to Tehran.

We think that Mr. A. Arsenian's solicitors may properly be informed that the circumstances would not justify Her Majesty's Government in insisting on a rehearing of his case, but that should he decide to prosecute his appeal at Tehran Her Majesty's Minister there will be instructed, as before, to give him all the assistance and protection he properly can in the prosecution of such appeal.

We have, &c.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, September 5, 1888.

Anglo-Portuguese Oyster Company's claim to recognition as transferees of oyster fisheries.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 10th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers (marked A to G), relative to the claim of the Anglo-Portuguese Oyster Company to recognition as transferees of a Concession from the Portuguese Government to work certain oyster fisheries near Lisbon.

That the circumstances under which the claim originally arose were set out in the preliminary statement of facts which preceded the Report made to Earl Granville upon its subject by the then Law Officers of the Crown, on the 11th September, 1884 (document A), while the subsequent course of the case was detailed in the statement furnished by Messrs. Parker, Garrett, and Parker, the solicitors of the Company (document B), to which copies of the various Judgments referred to were annexed.

Judgments of Courts in their favour.

That it would be seen that the Company had obtained Judgments of the Portuguese Tribunals affirming their legal right and title to the Concession. That the property included in the Concession consisted of the Island of Montijo and oyster-beds in the district of Aldeagalleja, and of oyster-beds in the district of Almada. That pursuant to the Judgments of the Portuguese Courts judicial possession of the property in the district of Aldeagalleja was given to the Company, and that their title was duly registered in the office of the "Conservador" or Registrar of Lands for that district.

Refusal of Portuguese Government to recognize the Company.

But that the Registrar of the district of Almada, notwithstanding the Judgments and orders of the Court, declined to register the title of the Company to the oyster-beds in that district included in the Concession. That in refusing such registration he was acting by direction of the Government, who declined to recognize the Company as the transferees of the Concession, on the ground that their previous consent was required to the transfer, and that they were not parties to the law-suits which resulted in the Judgments of the Portuguese Tribunals in their favour. That in the meanwhile the Company had not only been put to enormous expense in the way of litigation, but had been unable to work the oyster-beds, and were threatened with ruin.

That the grounds on which the Portuguese Government justified their attitude towards the Company would be found stated in detail by the Minister for Foreign Affairs, Senhor Barros Gomes, in his notes to Mr. Petre, Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon, of the 24th February and the 12th March last, which, together with Mr. Petre's replies and a Memorandum by Mr. Hart, the Manager of the Company, would be found in documents (C) and (D).

That document (E) contained the opinion of Senhor José Diaz Ferreira (the legal adviser and advocate to the Company) on the contention of the Portuguese Government.

That document (F) contained the criticisms of the Company on the two notes of Senhor Barros Gomes of the 24th February and the 12th March last.

That Sir George Bonham, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Lisbon, in his despatch No. 63 of the 2nd July last (document G), transmitted a translation of the Judgment of the Court of First Instance at Almada, dated the 6th June, 1888, directing the "Conservador" of that district to register, in the name of the Company, the oyster-beds which they claimed in that district under the Concession.

That it was difficult to understand why the Portuguese Government should refuse to confirm the transfer of the Concession to the British Company.

That, as pointed out by the Company in Mr. Hart's letter of the 3rd July last (document F), it had not been the practice in the previous dealings with the Concession in question to obtain the previous consent of the Portuguese Government to its transfer. That when that Government issued the Royal Decree of the 12th September, 1883, declaring M. Amourous the transferee and successor of the late M. Place, they had full notice of the claim of the British Company, and that it was probably on that account that they introduced into the Decree (clause 3) imposing on M. Amourous the responsibility of answering before the competent Tribunals for all obligations contracted by M. Place in relation to the Concession (see Mr. Hart's printed letter, p. 1, document F). That it was reasonable to infer from that clause that the intention of the Government at the time was that the Concession should become ultimately vested in the parties who should be declared by the Tribunals to be lawfully entitled thereto.

That it would appear, therefore, that the British Company had been treated in this matter with considerable harshness and injustice by the Portuguese Government.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to what (if any) further diplomatic action could properly be taken by Her Majesty's Government in the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to report—

Opinions as to—

Refusal to carry out Decree of Courts;

That, in our opinion, if the Almada Registrar should refuse to obey the Decree of the 6th June, 1888, any means afforded by the Portuguese law of compelling him to do so should, in the first instance, be resorted to by the British Company, but if there is no legal remedy, or if the Registrar states that his refusal is based on the orders of the Portuguese Executive, Her Majesty's Government may properly make such refusal the subject of serious complaint.

Payment of taxes

It is stated in the letter of Senhor Barros Gomes to Mr. Petre, under date the 24th February, 1888 (see document C), that the Company paid taxes to the Treasury in respect of the oyster-beds. If it could be shown that the Portuguese Government received these taxes from the Company, and knew of the transfer at the time of payment, the fact would afford Her Majesty's Government strong arguments in support of the Company's claims.

Revocation of Decree of 1883.

The Portuguese Government are not, in our opinion, bound to revoke the Decree of the 13th September, 1883, and issue a new one recognizing the Company, but Her Majesty's Government would be justified in using their influence to induce them to do so, in view of the fact that the Portuguese Courts have confirmed the English Judgment in favour of the title of the Company, and adverse to that of M. Amourous, and that upon those proceedings the Portuguese Government were represented.

Anglo Portuguese Oyster Company's claim to recognition as transferees of oyster fisheries.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 4th ultimo, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, and in connection with the papers upon the same subject on which we favoured your Lordship with our Report upon the 5th September last, some further documents and correspondence, as marked in the margin,* with reference to the claim of the Anglo-Portuguese Oyster Fisheries Company to recognition as transferees of a Concession from the Portuguese Government to work the oyster fisheries in the districts of Almada and Aldeagalazza.

Refusal to register the title of Company upheld by Court of Relação.

That it would be seen from the Judgment of the Court of Relação, delivered at Lisbon on the 18th July last (a translation of which was inclosed), that the original Judgment of the Delegado of Almada of the 6th June had been reversed, and that the refusal of the Registrar of the district to register the title of the Company to the Almada oyster-beds in accordance with the Judgment and orders of the Court of First Instance had been upheld.

That an appeal to the Supreme Tribunal against the Judgment of the Court of Relação was, however, pending at the instance of the Company.

That as a matter of strict right the Portuguese Government might be entitled to insist that their previous consent was a condition precedent to the perfecting of the claim of the Company as transferees of the Concession; but that no reason had as yet been assigned by them for refusing such consent now that the title of the Company had, subject to such consent, been established by the Company as against all other claimants.

That the question therefore arose whether, in order to avoid unnecessary litigation (although the matter was still sub judice), Her Majesty's Government might not properly urge the Portuguese Government to indicate what steps they required the Company to take so as to enable that Government to rescind the Decree of the 12th September, 1883, in favour of M. Amorous, and to issue a fresh Decree confirming the Company in their legal rights as established by the Portuguese Tribunals.

That, with reference to the concluding words of our Report of the 5th ultimo, Sir Julian Pauncefote was to observe that the Portuguese Government were only represented upon the proceedings in pursuance of section 1087 of the Portuguese Civil Code, which was to the effect that Judgments pronounced by foreign Tribunals . . . . should not be carried into effect in the kingdom unless they were first examined and confirmed by one of the Supreme Courts of the Judicature, in the presence of the parties interested and of the Public Prosecutor ("Procurador del Rey"). . . . .

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the question submitted therein, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the then aspect of the case.

Reversal of Judgment of Court of Relação.

We were further honoured with a Memorandum from Sir Julian Pauncefote, dated the 12th ultimo, inclosing a letter from Mr. Hart, the Managing Director of the Anglo-Portuguese Oyster Fisheries Company,† stating that the Supreme Tribunal of Lisbon had allowed the Company's appeal and confirmed the Judgment of the District Judge of Almada.

We have also the honour to acknowledge the receipt of a further Memorandum from Sir Julian Pauncefote, dated the 26th October, inclosing a further letter from Mr. Hart,* and also a translation of the Judgment of the Supreme Tribunal of Lisbon relative to the claim of the said Company.

---

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

Should urge Portuguese Government to recognize Company as transferees.

That in our opinion, in view of the reversal of the Decree of the Court of Relação by the decision of the Supreme Court of Lisbon, Her Majesty's Government may properly urge the Portuguese Government to recognize the Company as transferees of the Concession, and issue a Decree to that effect.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received October 4.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, October 3, 1888.

Arrests on British ships in foreign ports.

Question as to assistance by Consul.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir V. Lister's letter of the 10th ultimo, stating that he had to transmit to us, by your Lordship's direction, a despatch (No. 14, Consular, of the 20th June, 1888) which had recently been received from Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh, with its inclosures, with reference more particularly to certain questions raised therein as to the extent of the duties and obligations incumbent upon a British Consul when summoned by the local authorities to facilitate by his presence on board a British ship the serving of a warrant upon the master or any other person on that ship.

Case of the "Howards" at Libau.

That those questions had, it would be seen, immediately arisen for discussion out of the circumstances attendant upon an attempt by the Russian authorities at Libau to arrest on board his vessel, and for a criminal offence committed in that town, the master of the British ship "Howards," which attempt, as was alleged by the Russian Government, had been frustrated owing to the action of Her Majesty's Vice-Consul at Libau in refusing to accompany the local authorities on board the "Howards," or to co-operate with them in effecting the arrest.

Suggested alteration of Consular Instructions.

Sir R. Morier's despatch to Consul.

That it seemed, however, unnecessary now to consider the actual facts of that particular case (they were to be found set out in Inclosure No. 4 to Sir R. Morier's No. 14) in any detail, as the episode had been closed; but the occurrence had led to a suggestion on the part of Her Majesty's Ambassador (see Sir R. Morier's No. 14) that paragraph 7 of the Consular Instructions at present in force with regard to British ships in foreign ports was not sufficiently precise, and required some further amplification in the sense of the directions furnished by him to Mr. Consul Raby in connection with the case of the "Howards" (Sir R. Morier to Mr. Raby of the 20th June, 1888, Inclosure No. 8 in Sir R. Morier's No. 14).

As to liability of Consul in event of mistake or malice on part of authorities.

That some doubt had been expressed as to whether cases might not arise where, owing to some mistake of law or fact, or where the warrant had been maliciously issued, the person arrested on board the British ship might not, in an action for false imprisonment, hold the Consul liable for giving his countenance to support the arrest.

That Sir V. Lister was therefore to request that we would take the papers transmitted therewith into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether Sir R. Morier's despatch (No. 14, Consular, of the 20th June) and his instructions to Mr. Consul Raby (Inclosure No. 8 in that despatch) should be approved, and whether an addition to paragraph 7 of the Consular Instructions in the sense proposed might safely and properly be made.

[†] Mr. Hart, October 8, 1888.

[*] Mr. Hart, October 19, 1888, and inclosure.

That your Lordship would be glad at the same time to be favoured with any general observations upon the subject which we might desire to offer.

---

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Approve despatch and proposed alteration. As to liability of Consul.

That we are of opinion that Sir R. Morier's despatch and his instructions to Consul Raby should be approved, and that an addition to paragraph 7 of the Consular Instructions in the sense proposed may safely and properly be made. In acting in the manner suggested the Vice-Consul could not properly incur the risk of any action by reason of the arrest being in fact irregular or malicious.

No. 46.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received January 30.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, January 28, 1888.

New Law of Salvador as to foreigners and nationality.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list with reference to certain provisions in the new Law of the Republic of Salvador of the 29th September, 1886.

That the terms of that Law in relation to foreigners and to the conditions by which nationality was to be determined thereunder in Salvador had been already submitted to us for consideration, and formed, on the 22nd April, 1887, the subject of our Report to your Lordship.

That on the 27th July of last year a despatch, embodying the views expressed in that Report, was forwarded to Mr. Chapman, Her Majesty's Representative at Guatemala, and that he was instructed—after consultation with the Representatives of the other Powers accredited to the Government of Salvador—to bring under the notice of that Government the objectionable features in the law to which we had drawn attention.

That accordingly, on the 19th September, Mr. Chapman addressed a note to Señor Delgado, the Salvadorean Minister for Foreign Affairs, on the subject (Mr. Chapman's despatch No. 118, Inclosure 3), and that Sir Julian Pauncefote was now to invite our attention to the reply of that Minister, dated the 20th October, and of which a translation was inclosed in Mr. Chapman's despatch No. 131, Inclosure 2.

Salvadorean note.

That it would be seen that the Salvadorean Minister for Foreign Affairs combated in almost every respect the views put forward on behalf of Her Majesty's Government; and that, as the enforcement of the law in its present form against British subjects might cause, at any moment, questions of practical difficulty to arise, it became necessary to consider whether some further declaration or protest on the subject might not be desirable.

Question as to necessity for a reply.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was, therefore, to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether Señor Delgado's note called for a reply from Her Majesty's Government, and that, if so, in what terms such reply might most advantageously be couched.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

Conditions for agreeing to Articles 26 and 27.

That, in our opinion, Articles 26 and 27 as worded are open to objection, but an alteration in language would make it clear that they operated merely as directions to legal officers of the Republic as to the evidence they should require before giving effect to the claims of foreigners. Assuming this to be their true construction we do not think it would be necessary to insist upon the objection, but in our opinion the Salvadorean Minister should be informed that it is upon this distinct understanding that Her Majesty's Government abstain from further protest.

Should repeat protest against restriction of diplomatic interference.

With regard to the Articles to which we objected upon the ground that they purported to limit, or restrict, the diplomatic interference of Her Majesty's Government on behalf of British subjects, we think it necessary that our former protest should be clearly repeated and insisted upon.

Her Majesty's Government cannot properly admit that any rules or conditions made by a foreign State can have the effect of disentitling a British subject to claim the diplomatic interference of the Representatives of his country on his behalf.

Should note expressions as to Article 49.

With regard to Article 49, we think the answer to Señor Delgado should take note of his satisfactory expressions upon the subject.

Representation as to Article 53 not necessary.

As to Article 53, it is not, in our opinion, necessary that any further representation should be made.

We have, &c.

Change of nationality of natives of Shan States of Upper Burmah after British annexation. Case of Chong Kham.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin* relative to the case of Chong Kham, a native of Moné, one of those Shan States which became British territory upon the annexation of Upper Burmah to Her Majesty's dominions.

That the actual annexation of Upper Burmah was proclaimed on the 1st January, 1886, although the status of the newly-acquired dominion was left unsettled at the time, so that it was not until the 26th of the following February that its incorporation in British India took place.

That it was therefore conceived there was, in the absence of any special reservation to the natives of the Shan States thus annexed of their original nationality, a transfer of their allegiance to the British Crown, and an implied adoption of British nationality by them, at the date of annexation, and that consequently Chong Kham, amongst other natives, although himself residing at the time in Chiengmai, in the Kingdom of Siam, in fact became a British subject on the 1st January, 1886.

That it appeared, however, that in March of the same year he, being a British subject at the time, though ignorant of that fact, and imagining himself to be still a subject of the King of Burmah, signed some document which practically amounted to an adoption of Siamese nationality on his part.

That it seemed clear, moreover, that had he known in March 1886 that he was then entitled to the protection and privileges attaching to British nationality, Chong Kham would certainly not have endeavoured to avail himself of Siamese protection, and that considerable doubt was felt as to whether in such circumstances he could properly be said to have "voluntarily become naturalized" in a foreign State.

That for those reasons your Lordship was inclined to intimate to the Siamese Government that Her Majesty's Government considered Chong Kham entitled to the status and privileges, which he had now claimed, of a British subject.

But that your Lordship, while thus dealing with this particular case, would not propose to make any general declaration on the part of Her Majesty's Government which might bind their future action in alleged similar cases, with respect to the exact circumstances of which no such precise knowledge had reached you.

That Sir Julian Paucefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether Chong Kham was to be considered a British subject, and whether the Siamese Government might properly be informed in the sense indicated in that letter.

That your Lordship would at the same time be glad to be favoured with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

He is a British subject and entitled to a passport.

That, in our opinion, it may be properly represented to the Siamese Government that Her Majesty's Government consider Chong Kham is entitled to be regarded as a British subject, and to receive a passport from the British Consul.

Siamese may accept a voluntary transfer of nationality.

We desire to add that it does not seem clear to us that the terms of the passport granted by the local authorities have so serious a meaning as is suggested, but, in any case, we cannot refuse to the Siamese Government the right of accepting a transfer of allegiance by British subjects, if such transfer is made voluntarily and with the intention of becoming naturalized in Siam.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received March 26.)

Wreck of the "Kong Lee," a Siamese vessel.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 14th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, with reference to a question which had arisen as to the competency of Her Majesty's Consular Court for Siam to entertain certain proceedings in the case of a vessel named the "Kong Lee."

That that vessel, which was owned by one Phya Nakhen, a Siamese official and (as was believed) subject, was some months ago wrecked in a typhoon in the Gulf of Siam, and was found floating bottom upwards in that gulf, all of her crew having undoubtedly perished through the disaster.

That she was towed by Siamese Government steamers out of the course of passing vessels, and was left by them on the mud off the west coast of the gulf in Siamese territorial waters.

That subsequently both vessel and cargo (consisting of timber) were salved by the Straits Insurance Company, a British Company, by whom the cargo was insured.

That the head office of the Company was at Singapore, and that the salvage was effected under the direction of their agents at Bangkok, Messrs. Windsor, Rose, and Co.

Dispute as to amount of salvage.

That the owner and the salvors could not agree as to the amount of salvage justly payable, and that a question then arose as to the proper Tribunal for the adjudication of the claim.

Question as to jurisdiction of British Consular Court.

That it would be seen from the account given by Mr. Gould (Her Majesty's Acting Consul-General and Judge of Her Majesty's Consular Court at Bangkok) in his despatch No. 2 of the 13th January, that, at the request of the British salvors, "he accepted charge of the wreck on behalf of the Consular Court, and wrote to the Siamese Foreign Minister notifying that he had done so, and that he had taken the necessary steps towards holding a Salvage Court."

That the owner (through his legal adviser) denied the right of the Consular Court to interfere with the wreck (Inclosure 6 in Mr. Gould's No. 2 of the 13th January), and that on the 28th December the Siamese Foreign Minister wrote to Mr. Gould formally declining to admit the jurisdiction of the Consular Court in the case, "inasmuch as the vessel had not been shown to be a British ship, or owned by a British subject" (Inclosure 8 in Mr. Gould's No. 2).

That ultimately the vessel was sold by consent of parties, and the proceeds deposited at a bank in the joint names of the owner and of the salvors, pending the settlement of the question of jurisdiction.

That Mr. Gould stated in his despatch that he awaited the decision of the Secretary of State "on the point whether the Consular Court has jurisdiction to award the salvage, or whether the question must be left to the Siamese Courts."

That the Consular Court at Bangkok was created, and given the powers of, a Vice-Admiralty Court by the Siam Order in Council of the 6th May, 1886, Part V, Article 14, and could therefore, under section 10 (4) of "The Vice-Admiralty Courts Act, 1863" (26 & 27 Vict., cap. 24), entertain "claims in respect of salvage of any ship, or of life or goods therefrom."

That it was conceived, however, that the general terms of the Order in Council were only operative within the limits of the ex-territorial jurisdiction conferred by Treaty, and that it would seem that the contention of the Siamese Foreign Minister was that, under the provisions of the Treaty, the Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction of the Consular Court could not be exercised over any but British vessels.

That the Article of the Treaty between Great Britain and Siam of the 18th April, 1855, relating to ex-territorial jurisdiction, was section 2, as modified by the 2nd Article of the Supplementary Agreement to that Treaty (commonly known as the "Parkes" Agreement of the 13th May, 1856).

That if the Consular Court were not competent in the present case to exercise its Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction in rem, the next question which arose was whether, under the circumstances, the British Consular Court in its ordinary jurisdiction, or a Siamese Tribunal, was the proper forum for the adjudication of the amount of salvage payable.

That according to the rule, "Actor sequitur forum rei," which prevailed under the Treaty, it would apparently be open to the Siamese owner of the ship to sue the British salvors thereof in the Consular Court for the recovery of his vessel and cargo, or its value, while, on the other hand, it would seem to be competent to the British salvors to sue the Siamese owner in the Siamese Court for salvage services.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the reply which should be sent to Mr. Gould's inquiry on the question of jurisdiction, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Consular Court has not jurisdiction,

That, in our opinion, the Consular Court is not competent, in this instance, to exercise its Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction in rem, there being no provision in the Treaty enabling it so to do.

except by the consent of the defendant.

The claim, apart from the question of jurisdiction in rem, is a civil claim by British subjects against a subject of the King of Siam, and the Consul has no authority to hear and determine such claim except by consent of the defendant. Unless, therefore, the defendant agrees to the jurisdiction, the Consular Court ought not to entertain the proceedings.

No. 49.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received June 15.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, June 14, 1888.

Protection of Chan Kye Mong, an alien of Chinese origin, naturalized at Singapore.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list with reference to the case of one Chan Kye Mong, an alien whose nationality of origin was Chinese, but who was subsequently naturalized as a British subject in Her Majesty's Colony of the Straits Settlements.

That after leaving China, previously to so becoming naturalized in the Straits Settlements, Chan Kye Mong appeared, in 1871, to have taken up his residence in Siam, but that the exact dates at which he left that kingdom and arrived at Singapore were not known to your Lordship.

That in January of last year Chan Kye Mong applied, on the strength of the certificate of naturalization which had been granted him in 1875 by the Singapore authorities, to Her Majesty's Consulate at Bangkok to register him as a British subject in accordance with the provisions of section 29 of the Siam Order in Council of the 28th July, 1856, and the Registration Regulation of the 19th March, 1886, passed thereunder, which Regulation had been since confirmed by section 2 of the Siam Order in Council of the 12th July, 1887.

Registered as a British subject.

That he was accordingly registered in the books of the Consulate as a person entitled to British protection in Siam, and that the usual certificate of such registration was granted him.

His arrest and detention by the Siamese for travelling without a passport.

That in November of last year he was arrested at Supan, a provincial town in the interior of the country, whither he had gone without having first obtained, or applied for, a passport from the Siamese authorities with which, under Article V of the Treaty between Great Britain and Siam of the 18th April, 1855, he was bound to provide himself before travelling in Siam outside the territorial limits assigned by that Treaty for the residence of British subjects.

That under the latter part of the same Article the Siamese officials appeared to have been justified in detaining Chan Kye Mong, who, by travelling without a passport, had laid himself open to suspicion, but that they omitted to report the fact of such detention forthwith to the Consul as they were bound to do, and had detained him in prison and in chains since the beginning of November last in spite of the protests of Her Majesty's Consul.

That Mr. Gould, Her Majesty's Acting Consul-General at Bangkok, having in vain applied to the Siamese Government for Chan Kye Mong's release, on the ground that the latter was a naturalized British subject, had now applied to your Lordship for instructions as to his further action.

That meanwhile, a letter had been received from the Siamese Legation in this country (see the Marquis de Montri's letter of the 14th April, 1888) calling attention to the case and setting forth in some detail the various grounds on which the Siamese Government had felt themselves unable to comply with Mr. Gould's request.

Claimed as a Siamese subject.

That it was, as would be seen, contended by the Siamese Government that Chan Kye Mong, by reason of his having been of Chinese nationality when he originally came to reside in Siam in 1871, thereupon became, by the mere operation of Siamese law or usage, a Siamese subject, and that, notwithstanding the fact that he subsequently went to reside in a British Colony and there was naturalized as a British subject, he was no more entitled to the privilege of British protection while within the dominions of the King of Siam than he would have been had his nationality of origin been Siamese instead of Chinese.

That the last paragraph of Clause 3 of the Treaty between Great Britain and Siam of the 18th April, 1855, which was apparently invoked by the Siamese Minister as supporting his contention (see Marquis de Montri's letter, p. 6), merely provided that "Chinese not able to prove themselves British subjects shall not be considered as such by the British Consul, nor be entitled to his protection," and that its bearing on the question now under discussion was scarcely apparent.

His rights in Siam as a British subject affected by his nationality before naturalization.

That with reference to the question of the express limitation of Chan Kye Mong's rights and privileges as a naturalized British subject solely to the Colony of the Straits Settlements, reference might be made to section 16 of "The Naturalization Act, 1870," in addition to sections 6 and 8 (which latter section was the one especially alluded to in the Marquis de Montri's letter in connection with that point) of the local Act of the Governor of the Straits Settlements of the 15th May, 1867.

That the third paragraph of section 7 of "The Naturalization Act, 1870," which was no doubt the enactment alluded to on p. 7 of the Marquis de Montri's letter under the title of "The British Alien Amendment Act of 1870" provided that "an alien to whom a certificate of naturalization was given . . . . shall not, when within the limits of the foreign State of which he was a subject previously to obtaining his certificate of naturalization, be deemed to be a British subject unless he has ceased to be a subject of that State in pursuance of the laws thereof or in pursuance of a Treaty to that effect;" but that the application of the terms of that section to the present case necessitated the assumption that at the time when Chan Kye Mong received his certificate of naturalization at Singapore he was a Siamese and not a Chinese subject.

That it would certainly, however, seem open to doubt how far any Siamese usage or law which had never been formally assented to, or acquiesced in, by Chan Kye Mong, could operate to change his national status outside the Kingdom of Siam, or render it incumbent on Her Majesty's Government to admit that his original status had been modified in the manner suggested.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to inclose, for our information, copies of two Circular letters which were, on the 21st May, 1866, and the 20th April, 1882, respectively, addressed to Her Majesty's Diplomatic and Consular officers abroad, relative to the protection to be accorded by them to persons naturalized in British Colonies, together with a printed Memorandum, respecting the application of the last-mentioned Circular to the present case.

That those Circulars, it would be seen, were intended to have reference solely to the grants of passports to such persons, and to the general protection which should be afforded to them when travelling abroad under British Imperial or Colonial passports.

As to withdrawal of naturalization certificate, if it has been obtained by fraud.

That it was assumed that should the allegation of the Siamese Government to the effect that Chan Kye Mong obtained his certificate of naturalization by fraud, turn out upon inquiry to be correct, it would, in any case, be open to Her Majesty's Government to withdraw from him any protection or assistance to which he might otherwise be entitled at their hands, and to bring the circumstances to the attention of the Colonial Government with a view to the cancellation of his certificate.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to what instructions should be sent to Mr. Gould for his guidance in the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

His claim to protection should not be pressed. Doubts as to Siamese residence affecting his nationality.

That, in our opinion, instructions should be sent to Mr. Gould to refrain from pressing further the claim to assert for Chan Kye Mong any right of protection as a British subject. We doubt whether the statement of the Marquis de Montri that, according to Siamese usage, any Chinaman coming to reside in Siam becomes a Siamese subject, could be accepted by Her Majesty's Government as one upon which they could act, and if there were no other determining circumstances in the case, we should desire to give further consideration to this point. We are, however, of opinion that the certificate obtained at Singapore, even if not obtained as is alleged by fraud, only entitled Chan Kye Mong to obtain a passport in accordance with the Circular Instructions, and that he having failed to obtain such passport, and subsequently travelled in Siam as a Siamese subject, i.e., without asking for a passport from the Siamese authorities, in accordance with the Treaty, Her Majesty's Government ought not now to demand that he should be treated as a British subject.

Contravention of Passport Regulations deprives him of rights as British subject.

Approve instructions as to his protection.

We see no objection to Mr. Gould receiving instructions in the terms suggested by the concluding sentence of Sir Julian Pauncefote's Memorandum of the 12th May, 1888.*

We have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received July 18.)

My Lord,

Royal Courts of Justice, July 17, 1888.

Protection of Chan Kye Mong, an alien of Chinese origin, naturalized at Singapore.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the draft of a despatch which your Lordship proposed to address to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Bangkok, based upon our Report of the 14th ultimo, in regard to the case of Chan Kye Mong; and that Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request us to be good enough to inform your Lordship whether we concurred in the terms of that despatch.

Approve draft despatch to Mr. Gould.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—That we concur in the terms of the draft despatch submitted to us.

Annex.

The Marquis of Salisbury to Mr. Gould.

(No. 46.)

Sir,

Foreign Office, July 19, 1888.

I HAVE had under my consideration, in communication with the Law Officers of the Crown, your despatch No. 3 of the 13th January last, respecting the case of Chan Kye Mong, and also a note on the same subject which I received from the Siamese Minister at this Court on the 16th April, and of which I inclose a copy herein for your information.*

The facts of the case, as they appear from your despatch and the Marquis de Montri's note, are as follows:—

Chan Kye Mong, of Chinese origin, went, in the year 1871, to reside in Siam, and proceeded thence, at some date not stated, to Singapore, where a certificate of naturalization was granted to him by the Colonial authorities in 1875.

On the strength of that certificate Chan Kye Mong applied to Her Majesty's Consulate at Bangkok, in January 1887, to be registered as a British subject, and was given a certificate of registration for that year, and was informed that, unless he returned to Singapore within the year and applied for a passport, he would not be registered in 1888. Before that limit of time had expired he was arrested at Supan, a provincial town in the interior of Siam, whither he had gone without having first obtained or applied for a passport from the Siamese authorities, with which, under Article V of the Treaty between Great Britain and Siam of the 18th April, 1855, a British subject is bound to provide himself before travelling in Siam outside the territorial limits assigned by the Treaty for the residence of British subjects; and Siamese officials are, under that Article, justified in detaining a British subject so travelling without a passport; but in the case of Chan Kye Mong they omitted to report the fact of such detention to the British Consul, as under the Treaty they were bound to do, and he has been kept in prison and in chains since the beginning of November last, on charges connected with the Siamese Revenue Laws, in spite of your protests.

* M. de Montri, April 14, 1888.

The Siamese Government contend that Chan Kye Mong, by reason of his having been of Chinese nationality when he originally went to reside in Siam in 1871, became, by the mere operation of Siamese law or usage, a Siamese subject; and that notwithstanding the fact that he subsequently went to reside in a British Colony, and there was naturalized as a British subject, he was no more entitled to the privilege of British protection, while within the dominions of the King of Siam, than he would have been had his nationality of origin been Siamese instead of Chinese.

It is not necessary that I should enter into a discussion of the plea thus set up, for the conclusion at which I have arrived in regard to Chan Kye Mong's case does not depend upon this contention of the Siamese Government, and Her Majesty's Government must not be taken as admitting its soundness.

The certificate of naturalization granted at Singapore to Chan Kye Mong, even if not obtained by fraud as alleged by the Siamese Government, did not entitle him to the rights and capacities of a British subject beyond the limits of the Colony of the Straits Settlements. It only entitled him to procure a passport from the Colonial Government (in accordance with the Circular instructions of the 21st May, 1866, and the 20th April, 1882), for the purposes of travel, and to invoke your good offices (as a subject of the Queen in a British Colony) in any difficulty which he might have with the local authorities.

But in view of his omission to procure a Colonial passport, and of his having travelled in Siam as a Siamese subject, viz., without asking for a passport from the Siamese authorities, in accordance with Treaty, Her Majesty's Government cannot now demand that he should be treated as a British subject.

I have accordingly to direct you to refrain from pressing further the claim to assert for Chan Kye Mong the rights of a British subject under the Treaty; but though he is not entitled to be registered in Siam as a British subject, and to be withdrawn from the native jurisdiction, there is no objection to your watching the case, and extending your good offices to him, as a subject of the Queen in a British Colony, to such extent as may become necessary to protect him against any unjust and illegal treatment at the hands of the Siamese authorities.

I am, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received November 20.)

My Lord,

Royal Courts of Justice, November 20, 1888.

Appointment of British Consul for the Siamese Malay States.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list with reference to the formal refusal of the Siamese Government to grant their exequatur to Her Majesty's Consul for the Siamese Malay States under the circumstances following.

That it was decided early in the present year to establish a British Consulate for Kedah and the neighbouring Malay States of Siam, and that Mr. Skinner, Her Majesty's Resident Councillor at Penang, was appointed to the post.

That in April last Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Bangkok was instructed to notify the appointment to the Siamese Government, and to apply for the exequatur usual in such circumstances.

Siamese refuse an exequatur.

That the Siamese Government, however, suggested that Her Majesty's Government should, before the exequatur was granted to Mr. Skinner, enter into an arrangement with respect to the exercise of Her Majesty's exterritorial jurisdiction in the Siamese Malay States similar to that already concluded with regard to Chiengmai, Lakon, and

1888

Lampoonchi by the Treaty between Great Britain and Siam of the 3rd September, 1883.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to observe, however, that the object of that Agreement was, not to enable Her Majesty's Government to appoint a Consul in those provinces, a power which they claimed under Treaty as thereinafter mentioned, but to provide that British Indian subjects coming from British Burmah for the timber trade should be placed under the jurisdiction of a native Tribunal, subject to being withdrawn from such jurisdiction by Her Majesty's Consul for those provinces. [The precise circumstances under which that Treaty was made were stated in the reference attached to the Law Officers' Report No. 50 of 1882.]

That similarly in 1885, when the Government of the French Republic were desirous of appointing a Vice-Consul at Luang Phrabang, the Siamese Government refused to recognize the appointment unless an arrangement analogous to that in force in Chiengmai, Lakon, and Lampoonchi could be negotiated.

That the principal ground, however, assigned for the Siamese refusal (which had the indirect support of Her Majesty's Government) in the latter case was the absence of any French subjects needing protection within the limits of Luang Phrabang, while in Kedah and the other Siamese Malay States now in question, British subjects and protected persons were found in considerable numbers, and that the two cases, therefore, appeared to stand on a very different footing.

That Her Majesty's Government contended that they were entitled to make the appointment in question by virtue of the existing Treaty stipulations alone, and without entering into any such special arrangement as was alluded to above; and that it was considered that it might not be politic on the part of Her Majesty's Government by negotiating a special Convention in order to induce the Siamese Government to grant an exequatur to Mr. Skinner, to weaken in any respect that absolute right to appoint Consuls and exercise Consular jurisdiction in Siam, which, as was contended, was secured to Her Majesty by Treaty.

Right of appointment under m.-f.-n. clause of Treaty of 1855.

That Her Majesty's Government claimed the right by virtue of the most-favoured-nation clause (Article X) contained in the Treaty between Great Britain and Siam of the 18th April, 1855, and of Articles II and VI of the Commercial Treaties between Germany and Siam of the 7th February, 1862, and Italy and Siam of the 3rd October, 1868, respectively.

Italian and German Treaty rights.

That copies of those Treaties were inclosed, and that it appeared therefrom that Her Majesty's Government had, by virtue of the Articles in the German and Italian Treaties, already more particularly referred to, a right to appoint Consuls in the "ports and towns" of Siam, but that no such Consul might begin to exercise his functions until he had received his exequatur.

Grounds of Siamese refusal.

That the grounds apparently advanced by the Siamese Government for refusing an exequatur in the present case were :—

1. That Article II of the Treaty between Germany and Siam of the 7th February, 1862, only stipulated for the reciprocal recognition, by the Powers parties thereto, of Consuls appointed in the "ports and towns," not the "provinces," of their respective States, and that the Treaty between Italy and Siam of the 3rd October, 1868, did not "promise an exequatur" to Consuls thus appointed. (See Mr. Gould's telegram No. 7 of the 13th October, 1888.)

2. That the Queen's Commission to Mr. Skinner was worded in an unusual manner, and that previous intimation of the intention of Her Majesty's Government to appoint a Consul was not given to the Siamese Government.

That it might be argued that a Consul, in order to come within the terms of the German and Italian Treaties already referred to, must be appointed to a "port" or a "town," and that if it were thought that the fact of Consul Skinner not being so appointed afforded to the Siamese Government a valid ground for refusing his exequatur, that objection could be removed by assigning him some place of residence under the terms of a fresh Commission.

That it was not, however, desired to take that course, unless, in our opinion, it should be essential to the validity of the British contention to do so.

That with regard to objection No 2, Sir Julian Pauncefote was to say that the appointment was as a matter of fact notified to the Siamese Government in the manner usual in such cases; and that the Queen's Commission—a copy of which was inclosed—described Mr. Skinner's Consular district as "the States of Kedah, Satul, Perlis, Ghirbi, Junk-Ceylon, Kepah, Ranung, and Kra," whereas in the case of Chiengmai, above mentioned, the Consular district was described as "the territories of Chiengmai, Lakon, Lampoonchi, Muang Nan, and Phra," while Chiengmai itself was appointed to be the Consular place of residence, and was further referred to in the Commission issued to the Vice-Consul, of which a copy was annexed, as being "within the said dominions" (i.e., of the King of Siam).

That those latter words were omitted from Mr. Skinner's Commission simply because no place of residence was assigned for him.

That before, however, taking any further steps in the matter, your Lordship desired to be favoured with our opinion on the following questions :—

1. Whether any alteration in the form of Mr. Skinner's Commission was necessary; and 2, whether (a) if such alteration were not requisite, or, on the other hand (b), if it were; and, notwithstanding the fact that it was made by Her Majesty's Government, the Siamese Government still refused to grant an exequatur in the case of Mr. Skinner, their refusal would amount to such a breach of the obligations devolving, both from existing Treaties and by the usage of nations, upon that Government, as to entitle Her Majesty's Government to "passer outre," and to inform them that, if the exequatur were not issued without further conditions or delay, Mr. Skinner would be instructed to exercise his Consular functions without it, and that Her Majesty's Government would hold them responsible, in all respects, for his proper treatment.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted therein, and also with any general observations we might have to offer on the matter.

We were also honoured with a note from Sir Julian Pauncefote, dated the 14th instant, covering a further despatch (and inclosure) from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Bangkok. (See Mr. Gould's No. 51 of the 10th October, 1888.)

---

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to report—

H. M.'s Govt. entitled to privileges granted to Italy.

That in our opinion Her Majesty's Government is entitled to claim the same privileges as are conferred on the King of Italy by the Treaty of the 3rd October, 1868. By the VIth Article of that Treaty the King of Italy "may appoint Consuls in the Siamese State, and they may reside in the cities or ports where His Majesty may think fit to place them." It is by the same Article provided that the Consuls shall enjoy all the immunities and privileges granted to the Consuls of the most favoured nations, and it is stipulated that, before they assume the exercise of their functions, they shall obtain the usual exequatur from the King of Siam.

Form of Commission needs amendment.

In our opinion the form of Mr. Skinner's Commission requires amendment, inasmuch as it does not show that the places for which he is commissioned are within the Siamese State, and does not appoint any city or port in which Mr. Skinner is to reside.

Refusal of exequatur after correction of Commission a breach of Treaty.

Steps to be taken in such case.

In the event of the Siamese Government refusing an exequatur to Mr. Skinner when it is applied for—after the issue of a Commission, correct in form—we are of opinion that such refusal would constitute a breach of Article X of the Treaty of 1855 on the part of the Siamese Government. But such breach of Treaty would not entitle Her Majesty's Government to instruct Mr. Skinner to exercise Consular functions, notwithstanding such refusal. It might properly be made the ground of diplomatic remonstrance, and, if that were ineffective, of the suspension of diplomatic relations with Siam.

Collision between the "Polantha" and "Moratin" in the Guadalquivir.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin* with reference to a collision which had lately occurred in the River Guadalquivir between the British vessel "Polantha" and the Spanish vessel "Moratin."

That your Lordship regretted that you were unable to furnish us with fuller details of the case in question, which had only just been brought to your Lordship's attention by the Spanish Embassy, but that it was thought that the accompanying papers would, at any rate, suffice to enable us to advise your Lordship with reference to the only question at present arising thereon.

Decision of Spanish Court.

That it appeared that immediately after the collision the authorities of the port of Seville held an inquiry, in accordance with the Regulations there in force, and decided that there was no valid claim for damages on either side, as the casualty was an accidental one.

That the owners of the "Polantha," however, being apparently dissatisfied with the decision, and not recognizing its validity, had now commenced a suit against the "Moratin" in the Admiralty Court of this country.

That the Spanish Government maintained that our Courts had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, and that the only proper and competent Tribunal to do so was the one which had already adjudicated upon the affair.

Spanish protest against further proceedings in British Courts.

That the Spanish Ambassador had protested, both verbally and by letter, against the continuance of proceedings in the Admiralty Court, and had requested your Lordship to cause Her Majesty's Government to take the necessary steps "to inhibit the (Court of) Admiralty in the legal proceedings which it is supposed they have commenced."

That it had been already verbally intimated to his Excellency that such a course as he suggested was, in your Lordship's judgment, impossible; but that in view of, and out of deference to, the strong wish expressed by the Spanish Government upon the matter, your Lordship would consult Her Majesty's Law Officers before finally replying, on the part of Her Majesty's Government, to the contention put forward by that of Spain.

That a draft of a letter which, should we see no objection, your Lordship proposed eventually to address to the Spanish Ambassador, had meanwhile been prepared, and was inclosed; and that Sir J. Pauncefote was to request that we would, at our earliest convenience, take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the terms of that draft were right and proper in the circumstances; or, if not, in what respects they might be advantageously amended or altered.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

Approve, with omission, proposed answer as to British jurisdiction in such cases.

That we think the answer is one which might properly be sent, omitting the part struck out, which raises questions of a controversial character, upon which it is not, in our opinion, desirable to enter.*

The Marquis of Salisbury to Señor del Mazo.

M. l'Ambassadeur, Foreign Office, February 11, 1888.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's note of the 25th ultimo regarding certain proceedings which are stated to have been taken in the Admiralty Court in this country respecting a collision which occurred in the River Guadalquivir between the British vessel "Polantha" and the Spanish vessel "Moratin," and, in reply to your Excellency's request that steps may be taken by Her Majesty's Government to inhibit the Court of Admiralty from continuing the proceedings in question, I have the honour to make the following observations.

In causes of collision it has been the practice of this country, as well as of most European States, and of the United States of America, to allow a party alleging grievance by a collision to proceed in rem against the colliding ship wherever that vessel be found, and I am advised and entertain no doubt that the Court of Admiralty of Great Britain has jurisdiction to hear and determine an action brought by a British subject against a foreign ship for a collision in foreign waters.

But in any event, the question, whether a legal Tribunal has or has not jurisdiction in a particular case, is a matter entirely for the decision of the Tribunal itself, and Her Majesty's Government have no power whatever to inhibit the Court in question from entertaining proceedings which have been instituted before it, [even if such proceedings are, as is implied, clearly misconceived and vexatious, on which latter point, however, your Excellency's note affords no specific information.

If the matter has, as stated, been already finally decided by a Spanish Court competent to entertain it, the Judgment of such Court can be pleaded in the present suit in answer to the claim now set up; but it is advisable that the owners of the Spanish vessel should put in an appearance to, and be represented at, the hearing of the action, as, if the Court should hold itself competent to entertain that action, it may possibly enter Judgment against them by default if they do not so appear.

The result of the latter proceeding would probably be that on the first occasion when their ship came within British jurisdiction it would be seized to satisfy the Judgment.]

Lloyd v. Lloyd. Divorce suit.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to a certain divorce suit now pending before the Swiss Tribunals, and more especially to the question whether a decree of divorce, should it eventually be granted by those Tribunals to the plaintiff in that suit, would be recognized as valid by the law of England.

That the circumstances of the case were set out in the letter addressed by the plaintiff's advocate to the Federal Department of Justice and Police at Berne (M. Favey, of the 9th October, 1888 [Inclosure 2 in Mr. Leveson-Gower's No. 91 of the 13th October]), and appeared to be shortly as follows:—

That the plaintiff (Mrs. Lloyd) was, like her husband, a natural-born British subject, and was married to him at Lausanne on the 7th June, 1884.

That the residence of both parties for some time subsequent to the marriage appeared to have been permanently fixed at Lausanne, and that it was at any rate clear that the marital domicile was Swiss.

That in June 1887 Mr. Lloyd deserted his wife, and had since been living in openly adulterous relations with another woman.

That, according to Swiss law, a divorce was obtainable by either party in respect of the adultery of the other (see Loi Fédérale of the 24th December, 1874, Article 46 A); but that, in respect of marriages contracted between foreigners, the Federal Law contained a further special provision to the effect that no action for divorce . . . . could be entertained by the Tribunals except it were established that (the Courts of) the country to which the parties belonged would recognize as valid their Judgment when pronounced (Loi Fédérale of the 24th December, 1874, Article 56).

As to informing Swiss Court that sentence will be recognized in England.

That in those circumstances the advocates for Mrs. Lloyd desired, and that it appeared to be necessary for the purposes of the suit that they should be able, to satisfy the Tribunal at Lausanne:—

1. That a divorce if pronounced between the parties by a competent Swiss Tribunal would be recognized in this country; and

2. That it would be recognized if pronounced on the sole ground of the adultery of the husband, unaccompanied by desertion for a period of two years and upwards.

Request, &c., of President for a formal reply.

That they had accordingly petitioned the Federal Department of Justice and Police to endeavour to obtain a declaration from Her Majesty's Government on the above points; and that the President of the Swiss Confederation (who was also Minister of Justice) had officially recommended their position to the favourable consideration of Her Majesty's Government (see M. Hertenstein to Mr. Leveson-Gower, of the 12th October, 1888), and had begged that a formal reply might be given to the two questions submitted by the petitioners.

That copies of two Reports upon a somewhat analogous case, with which we favoured your Lordship on the 28th September, 1886, and 7th April, 1887, respectively, were also inclosed for convenience of reference.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion (1) as to whether, in the circumstances, the recommendation of the President of the Swiss Confederation might properly be acceded to; and, if so (2) as to the terms of the answer which should be returned to the questions submitted by M. Favey in his letter of the 9th October.

That your Lordship would be glad at the same time to be favoured with any general observations which we might have to offer upon the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

May accede to request, and answer that sentence will be recognized.

That, in our opinion, the recommendation of the President of the Swiss Confederation may properly be acceded to, and that the questions submitted by M. Favey in his letter of the 9th October should both be answered in the affirmative.

Case of Hussein Hadji Mehmet, sentenced to death for murder in Cyprus.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 20th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the case of one Hussein Hadji Mehmet, a Mussulman native of Nicosia in the Island of Cyprus, who, on the 6th December last, was convicted before the Assize Court of that place of the murder of a woman called Latifé, and sentenced to death accordingly.

Turkish representations.

That in consequence, however, of the representations made on behalf of the convict to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople by the Grand Vizier, and by the Turkish Ambassador at the Court of St. James' to the Secretary of State, it was thought advisable to suspend the execution of the sentence until Her Majesty's Government could have the opportunity of considering fully the circumstances under which the crime was committed.

Strong reasons for commutation of sentence.

That it would be seen, moreover, from the accompanying papers, that strong reasons of a political and diplomatic nature existed in favour of a commutation of the death sentence, if such a course could, consistently with the interests of justice, be pursued.

That a transcript of the notes of the evidence taken at the trial by the Chief Justice of Cyprus, who presided over the Court on the occasion, was inclosed, together with copies of a Petition, dated the 8th December, from the mother of the convict, and of a further Petition, dated the 18th December, from his mother and brother, and of the remarks of the Chief Justice thereon respectively.

That the existing judicial system of Cyprus was constituted and the procedure of its Courts prescribed by the Order in Council of the 30th November, 1882, and that the convict was tried by a Court, formed under Article 6 of that Order, administering Ottoman law in accordance with Article 23 thereof.

That the Assize Court derived its authority to try the case from Article 50, and that the procedure at the trial was regulated by Chapter XX, Articles 120 to 137, of the same Order.

That it would be observed that there was as yet no "trial by jury" in Cyprus, that an Ottoman subject charged with murder was, however, tried by a Court of five, or, at all events, four Judges, and consisting of—

1. The Chief Justice of Cyprus.
2. The Puisne-Judge of the Supreme Court.

1888

3. The President of the District Court.

4 and 5. Two native members of the same District Court, one being a Christian and the other a Moslem by religion.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was also to bring to our attention Article 196 of the Order as dealing specifically with the cases in which an accused person could or could not be lawfully convicted upon the evidence of a single witness.

That by clause 22 of the previous Order in Council of the 14th September, 1878 (which clause, although the Order in Council had in some other respects been modified by subsequent legislation, was still in force), provision was made for the exercise of power and jurisdiction by Her Majesty in and over the Island of Cyprus, and that, by virtue of this clause, the High Commissioner of that island "may, as he shall see occasion, in Her Majesty's name and on her behalf, grant to any offender convicted of any crime in any Court, or before any Judge, Justice, or Magistrate within the said island, a free and unconditional pardon, or a pardon subject to such conditions as may at any time be lawfully thereunto annexed, or any respite of the execution of the sentence of any such offender for such period as may to him seem fit."

That other papers, bearing rather on the diplomatic than the purely legal aspects of the case, were also inclosed for our information.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether, having regard to all the circumstances, the case was one in which Her Majesty's High Commissioner might, in Her Majesty's name and on her behalf, properly grant to the convict a remission of the sentence of death passed upon him, either by commuting it to one of imprisonment for life, or to any other (and, if so, what) punishment.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

May commute sentence.

That, in our opinion, the case is one in which Her Majesty's High Commissioner may, in Her Majesty's name and on her behalf, properly grant a commutation of the sentence to one of ten years' imprisonment.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received May 8.)

[In reply to the following reference, the Law Officers reported as below on the 8th May, 1888.]

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, April 14, 1888.

Existence of certain Treaties with Turkey which, though not now in force in Turkey proper, are still in force in Bulgaria.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquis of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list in connection with a question which has lately arisen as to whether those Treaties which were in force between this country and Turkey (including more particularly the Commercial Treaty of the 29th April, 1861) at the time of the signature of the Treaty of Berlin on the 13th July, 1878, are still in force in Bulgaria, although such Treaties may have been denounced by Turkey subsequently to this date, and may have, in consequence, expired in so far as Turkey proper is concerned.

This general question arises practically for decision upon the particular case already mentioned of the Commercial Treaty between Great Britain and Turkey of the 29th April, 1861, which was denounced by Turkey in 1882, and undoubtedly expired, in so far as Turkey proper was concerned, in 1883.

This Treaty originally applied to the Province of Bulgaria as part of the Ottoman dominions, and continued so to apply to that province until the conclusion of the Treaty of Berlin.

By the Treaty of Berlin, however, Bulgaria was constituted an autonomous and tributary Principality under the suzerainty of the Sultan.

Effect of Treaty of Berlin as to Treaties in Bulgaria.

It appears, moreover, on an examination of the Protocols of the Conferences which took place at Berlin in June 1878 between the Representatives of the Great Powers prior to the signature of that Treaty (see more particularly Nos. 5 and 6), not to be open to serious doubt that it was then thought necessary to determine how Bulgaria should stand towards other nations with regard especially to her commercial relations with them until she should have had time to consider and consolidate her position, and to enter into direct negotiations with foreign Powers with a view to the conclusion of new Commercial Treaties should such a necessity be found to exist.

But pending a revision of those Treaties, it seems to have been the intention of the Powers that those Treaties which were then in existence should continue in force pending such ulterior arrangements as Bulgaria might find it advisable to make, for her own and their mutual benefit, with foreign Powers, independently of and without any interference from the Sublime Porte.

In confirmation of the view above put forward it appears important to call special attention to the language held by Prince Bismarck, from which none of the other Plenipotentiaries dissented, at the sitting of the 25th June, 1878.

His Highness then said, with reference to the proposition presented by Austria-Hungary, France, and Italy on the subject of maintaining intact in Bulgaria and Eastern Roumelia the Treaties of Commerce, of Navigation, and Regulations for Transit concluded with the Porte, that he "regarded it as in accordance with the law of nations that Bulgaria should remain under the authority of the Treaties by which she was bound under the Government of the Porte."

By Article XX of the Commercial Treaty of 1861 between Great Britain and Turkey the right was reserved to either party to denounce it, after a certain fixed period, by giving a year's notice; but by the Treaty of Berlin (Article VIII), Turkey, as one of the Contracting Parties thereto, has agreed with the other Powers not only that the Treaties of Commerce, &c., which were then in force between foreign Powers and the Porte should be maintained in the Principality, but also that "no change should be made in them with regard to any Power without its previous consent."

It therefore appears fair matter of contention that Turkey has thereby renounced her right to denounce her Treaties with foreign Powers so far as Bulgaria is concerned, without the assent of the other Powers who were parties to the Treaty of Berlin; that she agreed, on behalf of her then Tributary Principality, that no change should be made by Bulgaria in those Treaties with regard to any Power without the previous consent of that Power; and that she engaged, on her own behalf as well as on that of the Principality, that the subjects and citizens and commerce of all the Powers should be treated in Bulgaria "on a footing of strict equality."

If this be so, it would appear to follow that Bulgaria also was by the Treaty of Berlin deprived of the power of abrogating the Commercial Treaties which were at that time in force without the consent of each of the Powers interested.

On the opposite hypothesis, Bulgaria would at this moment have no Commercial Treaty engagements towards any of those Powers whose Treaties with Turkey have expired, and there would then apparently be nothing to prevent her from regulating her commercial relations with these foreign Powers by Decrees which might possibly prove very vexatious and obnoxious in their character, and highly prejudicial to British interests. She might, moreover, having once got rid of her existing Treaty engagements, delay the negotiations for the conclusion of new ones till such time as it suited her own convenience to enter into them.

It is submitted, however, that it was clearly not the intention of the Powers to allow the existence of such a state of things as this, but that the negotiators of the Treaty of Berlin intended, on the contrary, to establish a modus vivendi which neither Turkey nor

1888

Bulgaria would have any right to disturb without the full consent of all the Powers who were parties to that Treaty.

As to claiming m.-f.-n. treatment from Bulgaria.

By Article V of the Treaty of 1861, it was provided that "the duties to be imposed on any article, the produce or manufacture of the dominions or possessions of Her Britannic Majesty, imported into the dominions or possessions of His Imperial Majesty the Sultan, should in no case exceed one fixed rate of 8 per cent. ad valorem, or a specific duty fixed by common assent equivalent thereto;" and a Tariff Agreement providing for specific fixed import duties was eventually framed under the latter alternative mentioned in this Article, and came into force on the 1st (13th) March, 1862.

This fixed Tariff continued to prevail throughout the Ottoman dominions in respect to imports from Great Britain and British possessions until May 1883, although imports from some other countries, as, for instance, Germany, were subjected to somewhat more favourable treatment, being untariffed, and liable in all case to a general ad valorem duty of 8 per cent.

In May 1883, by virtue of the denunciation of the Treaty under which it had been framed, this fixed Tariff ceased to operate in Turkey proper, where it has since been replaced by a general import duty calculated at the rate of 8 per cent. ad valorem.

The English Capitulations of 1675 contain an engagement (Article XVIII) on the part of the Sultan "that all the Capitulations, privileges, and Articles granted to the French, Venetian, and other Princes which are in amity with the Sublime Porte, having been in like manner, through favour, granted to the English," by virtue of the Sultan's special command, "the same shall be always observed according to the form and tenour thereof, so that no one in future do presume to violate the same or act in contravention thereof."

These Capitulations were confirmed by the Treaty of Peace concluded at the Dardanelles on the 5th January, 1809, and have been kept alive (subject to certain modifications which for the present purpose it does not appear material to consider) by Article I of the Commercial Convention of the 16th August, 1838, between Great Britain and Turkey, and by Article XX of the Commercial Treaty of the 29th April, 1861, between the same High Contracting Parties, which declared that that Treaty should be substituted for the Convention of 1838.

It is presumed, therefore, that, although the Treaty of 1861 expired by notice in 1883, the Capitulations still remain in force, and can be appealed to as conferring upon British subjects and their commerce in the Ottoman dominions (in which, for the purpose of any claim resting upon the authority of the Capitulations, the Principality of Bulgaria may, under present circumstances, be included) a right to be treated on at least as favourable a footing as the subjects and commerce of any other nation, and that in all respects.

With reference to this latter point, I am to direct your especial attention to the Report of the then Law Officers of the Crown of the 18th May, 1883, and the two Foreign Office Memoranda (Confidential No. 4376 of the 7th February, 1883, and Confidential No. 4950 of the 11th April, 1883) inclosed herewith.

In these circumstances, Lord Salisbury is desirous of being advised (1) whether it is competent to Her Majesty's Government to claim from that of Bulgaria most-favoured-nation treatment for British subjects and commerce under either the Treaty of 1861, the Berlin Treaty of 1878, the Capitulations of 1675, or all of them; and more especially (2) whether, having regard to the wording of Article VIII of the Treaty of Berlin, which provides that British commerce should be treated in Bulgaria on a footing of "strict equality" with reference to the commerce of other Powers, there would be any inconsistency in Her Majesty's Government now demanding that treatment, while at the same time maintaining that the Treaty of 1861 between Great Britain and Turkey is still in force in Bulgaria, although the Tariff which was framed under it, and which bore a later date, gave to Great Britain different treatment to that which was conceded to Germany under her Treaty Tariff.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion on the questions submitted in this letter, and with any general observations which you may have to offer on the matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) JULIAN PAUNCEFOTE.

---

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we have considered the papers laid before us.

Treaties with Turkey before 1878 still in force in Bulgaria.

By the Treaty of Berlin it was provided that existing Treaties of Commerce with Turkey should be maintained in the Principality, and that no change should be made in them with regard to any Power without its previous consent. It was not competent to Turkey, after entering into this Treaty, to exercise with regard to Bulgaria the power it previously had of denouncing the Treaty of 1861.

Treaty of 1861 in force till 1889: Can then claim m.-f.-n. treatment from Bulgaria.

1. We are of opinion that Bulgaria will remain bound by the Treaty of 1861, at any rate until the 9th July, 1889, and that after that it will be competent to Her Majesty's Government to claim from that of Bulgaria most-favoured-nation treatment under the Capitulations of 1675 and the Berlin Treaty of 1878.

Demand for equality of treatment consistent with Treaty of 1861.

2. In our opinion there would be no inconsistency in Her Majesty's Government demanding equality of treatment, although the Treaty of 1861 and the Tariff thereunder are still in force. The words of Article V of the Treaty of 1861 are that the duty shall not exceed a certain figure. There is, in our opinion, nothing in this inconsistent with the demand for equality of treatment.

Petition of Selim Faris Chediak, of Turkish parentage, born in Malta, to be registered as a British subject.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 30th July last, transmitting to us a despatch from Sir Evelyn Baring as to the nationality of one Selim Faris Chediak, and also a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul-General and Judge at Constantinople,* forwarding a Petition from Selim Faris Chediak, praying that he might be recognized and registered as a British subject, and stating that it appeared that that person, who was of Turkish parentage, was born at Valetta, Malta, and was, therefore, a natural-born British subject. That he stated also that his father was naturalized as a British subject at Malta, but he had adduced no proof of the fact.

That the provisions of Her Majesty's Order in Council for the Levant (December

That the case might give rise to a conflict of jurisdiction, for it was conceived that, notwithstanding Chediak's birth in British territory, so long as he resided in Turkey he owed allegiance to the Sultan, and was subject to Ottoman jurisdiction.

That, in those circumstances, your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion as to whether Chediak's application to be registered as a British subject in the British Consulate at Constantinople should be acceded to, and, if so, whether any note of his double allegiance and nationality should be appended to such registration. Further, whether the certificate of the Maltese authorities inclosed in Sir Henry Fawcett's despatch might be accepted as sufficient proof of his birth at Valetta.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Sufficient evidence to justify his registration.

That, in our opinion, there is sufficient evidence to justify the registration of Chediak as a British subject, and he should be so registered, unless there are any considerations which make it desirable to refuse to recognize him as such. But at the time of such registration, he should be informed that it does not relieve him from his allegiance to the Ottoman Government, and a note should be made in the register that such notice has been given. The certificate of the Maltese authorities may be accepted as sufficient proof of his birth at Valetta.

Though sufficient doubt to justify a refusal if desired.

If Her Majesty's Government do not desire to register him, there is, in our opinion, quite sufficient doubt as to the fact of his birth in Malta to justify a refusal on the present information.

Claim of Harari family to British protection.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin,* relative to the claim of various members of the Harari (or Arary) family to British nationality, and consequently to British protection within the Ottoman dominions.

That the family in question was of Damascene origin and Jewish faith, and that the history of their claim would be found concisely set forth in Mr. Consul Wrench's Memorandum of the 16th February, 1887, and in the two Memoranda by Sir E. Hertslet (1) of the 15th March, 1886, respecting the nationality of Mr. Solomon Harari; and (2) of the 3rd August, 1888, respecting the claim of the Harari family to British protection in Turkey, which were inclosed.

Turkish refusal to recognize their claim.

That it would be seen that Solomon Harari had himself lately adopted Turkish nationality, but that other members of the family still pressed their claims to recognition as British subjects, although the Ottoman local authorities had hitherto absolutely refused, in any way whatever, to admit their claim, and had, especially since Solomon Harari's renunciation of his pretensions to British nationality, been treating them as Ottoman subjects.

That in 1857, and again in 1858, the then Queen's Advocate was consulted with reference to this claim, and reported in effect that there was no evidence sufficient to sustain it (see Queen's Advocate's Reports of the 22nd October, 1857, 27th January and 2nd September, 1858).

That Mr. Ezra Harari had lately (see Consul Dickson's No. 2 of the 6th January, 1888, and inclosures) submitted proofs of his British nationality to Her Majesty's Embassy at Constantinople, but that the documents which he had furnished did not appear to strengthen the case which had already been laid before and reported on by the Queen's Advocate.

That other papers, as noted in the inclosed list, were also sent in case we should desire to refer to them.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government were justified in recognizing the claim of the various members of the Harari family to British nationality, and in pressing it upon the Government of the Sublime Porte.

That your Lordship would be glad, at the same time, to be favoured with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

---

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Claim cannot be pressed.

That, in our opinion, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, Her Majesty's Government would not be justified in recognizing and pressing upon the Government of the Sublime Porte the claim of the various members of the Harari family to British nationality. It would not, in our judgment, be desirable to withdraw from Ezra the protection accorded him in 1856, and continued since that time.

Protection of E. Harari should be continued.

Y. L. Stambouli. British-protected subject at Damascus.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 14th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch (No. 416 of the 24th October) which, together with its inclosures, had lately been received from Her Majesty's Ambassador to the Sublime Porte with reference to the claim of one Yacoub Levy Stambouli to British nationality.

That that claim was contested by the Government of the Sublime Porte on the ground that recognition was originally obtained by means of fraudulent evidence, and, as would be remembered, formed the subject of reference to us on the 26th February of last year.

That we then reported (on the 17th March following*) that the documents submitted to us did not disclose sufficient evidence to prove fraud, and that, in the absence of such evidence, and having regard to the circumstances that in 1864, at the time of the receipt of the police Report upon the case, the Representative of the Ottoman Government at Damascus refused to call in question Stambouli's status, though incited to do so by the British Consul, Her Majesty's Government were justified in declining to withdraw from him their protection, at any rate without calling upon him to support his claim.

Further papers as to alleged fraud in obtaining British protection.

That it would be seen, however, that Sir William White entertained grave doubts as to the validity of Stambouli's claim, and had submitted for the further consideration of your Lordship a Memorandum by Mr. Block, the Assistant Dragoman to Her Majesty's Embassy at Constantinople, giving the reasons which convinced him that the protection which had been accorded to the Stambouli family was in the first instance fraudulently obtained.

That the other documents bearing on the case, as well as some papers having reference generally to the treatment of cases of disputed nationality, were inclosed.

That the claims of the Harari family, which were also alluded to in Sir W. White's despatch, would form the subject of a separate reference to us.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take all the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the additional information contained in Sir W. White's despatch No. 416 and its inclosures, when considered in connection with the evidence already laid before us in the papers which accompanied the reference of the 26th February, 1887, satisfactorily established that Stambouli's recognition as a British subject was originally obtained by fraud, and justified Her Majesty's Import of goods for transit by United States' fishing-boats into Canadian ports.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 23rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying decypher of a telegram which had been received from Her Majesty's First Plenipotentiary to the Fisheries Conference now sitting at Washington,* requesting that our opinion might be immediately obtained for his guidance as to whether Article XXIX of the Treaty of Washington of the 8th May, 1871, extended to goods brought into Canadian ports for transit by fishing vessels, and thereby added another to the four purposes [viz., those of (1) shelter; (2) repairing damages; (3) purchasing wood; and (4) obtaining water] for which it was agreed by Article I of the Convention of London of the 20th October, 1818, that American fishermen were entitled to be admitted to enter the bays or harbours of Her Britannic Majesty's dominions in America, not included within the limits prescribed by that Article.

That the document more particularly alluded to in the last paragraph of the decypher, as giving the Canadian argument against the suggestion, was inclosed for reference, together with copies of the Treaty Convention and Confidential Print which specially bore upon the point now in controversy between the British and American Plenipotentiaries.

That a copy of a Report furnished in connection with the same subject by our predecessors in office to the then Secretary of State upon the 5th August, 1886, was also inclosed.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers† transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion on the question.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to report—

Not added by Treaty of 1871 to purposes for which they may enter those ports.

That we are clearly of opinion that Article XXIX of the Treaty of Washington does not extend to goods brought into Canadian ports for transit by fishing vessels, and does not add another to the four purposes mentioned in Article I of the Convention of 1818. The United States' fishing-boats are entitled to enter those ports for shelter, repairing damages, purchasing wood, and obtaining water, and for no other purpose whatever.

Seizure of British Columbian sealers by United States' cruizers in Behring's Sea.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Robert Herbert's letter of the 9th ultimo, stating that in the month of August last the Marquis of Salisbury explained to us the circumstances in which certain British Columbian sealing schooners, named the "Thornton," the "Carolina," and the "Onward," were seized by the United States' Revenue cruizer "Corwin" in Behring's Sea, and the respective masters of those vessels tried, convicted, and sentenced to fine and imprisonment by the United States' Tribunals for killing fur-bearing animals in contravention of United States' Statute Law in waters, as was alleged, within American jurisdiction.

That, having considered the case submitted to us by Lord Salisbury, we reported to his Lordship on the 20th August* last that the seizure of the vessels in question was entirely unwarranted, and that a claim for compensation might properly be made and pressed without further delay.

Revised claims.

That Sir Robert Herbert was now desired by your Lordship to transmit to us copies of despatches from the Governor-General of Canada,† inclosing revised statements of claims against the United States' Government in the case of those vessels. That the claims had been revised in the circumstances shown in the correspondence noted in the margin.

Claims for further seizures.

That Sir R. Herbert was also to inclose copies of three further despatches from the Governor-General of Canada, forwarding claims against the United States' Government in the cases of the vessels "W. P. Sayward," "Grace," "Anna Beck," "Dolphin," "Alfred Adams," and "Ada," seized in the Behring's Sea during the season of 1887 for the alleged offence of illegally capturing seals, and in the case of the schooner "Favourite," which vessel was on the 2nd August, 1886, while sealing in Behring's Sea about 68 miles from land, ordered by the United States' cruizer "Corwin," under threat of seizure, to cease operations and leave the Behring's Sea forthwith.

That a copy of a letter from the Foreign Office, having reference to the claims inclosed in the Governor-General's secret despatches of the 2nd and 23rd December, 1887, and advanced in respect to the vessels "Thornton," "Carolina," and "Onward," was also inclosed, together with a printed copy of our Report of the 20th August, 1887, above referred to, and of the reference, with the accompanying documents, on which that Report was founded.

That Sir R. Herbert was further to inclose a copy of a despatch from the Governor-General of Canada, dated the 19th January, 1888, reporting that orders had been issued for the return to their owners of the vessels "Onward," "Thornton," and "Carolina."

That Sir R. Herbert was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and inform your Lordship how far, in our opinion, the various claims advanced in respect of the above-mentioned vessels could be properly urged by Her Majesty's Government against the Government of the United States.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we have considered the claims which have been presented in respect of the seizure of the vessels "Thornton," "Carolina," and "Onward," and the observations thereon in the letter of Sir Julian Pauncefote of the 21st January, 1888.

† Governor-General of Canada to Secretary of State, No. 9, January 15; Secretary of State to Governor-General, Secret, September 14, 1887

Opinion on revised claims generally.

We think it desirable to lay down, in the first place, certain considerations which must be borne in mind and applied in dealing with all the claims in question. We observe that the seizure of the vessels took place in the year 1886, during the fishing season. The claims may therefore properly embrace the value of the vessels, their equipment, and the loss of profits by reason of the interruption of the season of the year 1886; but if the claimants ask to be paid the value of their vessels, they cannot also claim the loss of profits during the succeeding seasons. On the other hand, if they make a claim for the profits which would have been earned during the seasons 1887 and 1888, they are not entitled to claim at the same time the full value of the vessels as in the year 1886.

If the claims are to be made on a basis of loss of profit they must be wholly remodelled, and the capital items representing the full value of the ships in 1886 must be omitted, the only claim admissible being one for deterioration in value by reason of the detention and want of repair of the vessels as compared with the estimated deterioration that would have taken place in the usual course of the voyages up to the 5th September, 1887, when it appears that the vessels were actually released.

In order to sustain any claim for estimated loss of profits during 1888, it would have to be shown that it was not reasonably possible to refit and equip vessels only released on the 5th September, 1887, so that they might be used during any part of the season of 1888.

As to items of various claims.

Turning now to the particular claim for each vessel, we find the revised claim of the "Thornton," set out on page 142 of the further correspondence 1887. We see no objection to the items of Exhibit A. making up 14,101 dollars, subject to proper verification of the items and amounts, and the production of vouchers, and to what we say below as to the charge of 7 dollars per skin.

As to the amount of 2,250 dollars claimed under Exhibit C., there is no objection in principle to the claim, assuming that the expenses were incurred directly in consequence of the seizure and are properly vouched.

With regard to the items in Exhibit D., the owners are entitled to some amount in respect of the estimated previous profits of the seal catch of 1886, but we are unable to judge from the accounts, as made out, whether the proper allowance has been made for expenses. The skins are charged in this exhibit, as well as in Exhibits A. and E., at 7 dollars each, but it is quite clear that very considerable expense would have been incurred before the owners of the vessel would have been in a position to realize the value of the skins; and though the objection is to a certain extent met by the Memorandum on page 143, we think the deduction should be made to appear clearly on the face of the claim.

As to Exhibit E., it is clear that some amount of interest may be claimed, but its exact amount must depend on the particular items of the other exhibits as sent in, and this applies to the case of all three vessels.

The particulars of the next claim, that of the "Carolina," appear as revised on page 138 of the further correspondence. To the items making up the sum of 14,101 dollars in Exhibit A. we see no objection, subject to the same reservation as mentioned in the case of the "Thornton," and the same remark applies to 1,500 dollars claimed in Exhibit C.

Exhibit D. will also have to be amended by allowing for the expenses which would have been incurred before the skins could have been actually brought into the market, and we notice that this is not met in the case of the "Carolina," as, to some extent, it is in the case of the other two vessels, by any Memorandum, though the amount is given of some of the expenses in Exhibit F.

Dealing on the same principles with the particulars of the claim in the case of the "Onward," which appear on p. 4 of the further correspondence 1888, we see no objection to Exhibit A., though we notice that the fines imposed on the captain and mate are included, which is not done in the other cases. We think it is an expense which may properly be claimed unless it is included, as we should expect it to be, in Exhibit C.

The other exhibits, which are in identical form with those in the case of the "Carolina," call for no further remarks than those we have already made on that case.

Further seizures unwarranted. Claims should be pressed.

With regard to the vessels "W. P. Sayward," "Grace," "Anna Beck," "Dolphin," "Alfred Adams," and "Ada," seized in the Behring's Sea during the season of 1887, upon the facts before us, these seizures were entirely unwarranted, and the claims for compensation should be pressed.

Claim for interference with the "Favourite" should also be pressed.

In respect of the schooner "Favourite," which was warned to cease operations under threat of seizure, the simple question is whether the threat was intended to be put in force, and whether she bonâ fide ceased to fish in consequence.

We have little doubt that both these questions would be answered in her favour, and in her case also a claim should be pressed, though the measure of damages will be different from that in the case of the other vessels, and would, in the absence of special circumstances, be the actual loss occasioned by reason of the interruption of the fishing.

Exemption of British ships from tonnage and light dues.

That by a recent American Statute (United States' Act of the 19th June, 1886, chapter 421, section 11 [see United States' Statutes at large, vol. xxiv, p. 79]), the President of the Republic had been granted (amongst other things) power to relieve, from tonnage dues in the United States ships arriving from those ports where United States' ships were relieved from similar dues.

That it would be observed that, under that section, any ship, whether a United States' ship or not, arriving in a United States' port from a foreign port where tonnage dues were levied on United States' ships, would not be entitled to the exemption; and that any ship, whether a United States' ship or not, arriving in a United States' port from a foreign port where tonnage dues were not levied on United States' ships, would be entitled to the exemption.

That under the second paragraph of Article II of the Treaty of the 3rd July, 1815 (Hertslet's Commercial Treaties, vol. ii, p. 386), British vessels were entitled to the same treatment as regarded tonnage dues (or dues levied on the ship according to its tonnage) as United States' ships.

That the paragraph in question was as follows:—

"No other or higher duties or charges shall be imposed in any of the ports of the United States on British vessels than those payable in the same ports by vessels of the United States; nor in the ports of any of Her Britannic Majesty's territories in Europe on the vessels of the United States than shall be payable in the same ports on British vessels."

That it would be seen that that Article merely conferred "national treatment" on British vessels in United States' ports; nor did any words appear elsewhere in the Treaty under which it would seem possible to claim most-favoured-nation treatment for British ships in United States' ports.

Reciprocal exemption of German and other ships.

That the President of the United States had from time to time, in the exercise of the powers conferred upon him by the above-mentioned section 11 of the Statute of the 19th June, 1886, exempted from tonnage dues vessels entered in the ports of the United States from various ports where reciprocity in that respect was accorded to United States' vessels.

That a recent Proclamation* (copy of which was inclosed) had so exempted vessels arriving from any of the ports of the German Empire.

That representations had been addressed to Her Majesty's Government, urging that steps should be taken to obtain for ships sailing from British ports the same exemption as was accorded under that Proclamation to ships sailing from German ports.

Grounds for claiming such exemption for British ships.

That it was suggested that to claim the exemption in question without fulfilling the condition laid down in the United States' Statute, viz., the exempting from tonnage dues of the United States' ships in British ports, would, however, not amount to a claim of most-favoured-nation treatment from the United States for British ships, but would, in effect, be to claim such treatment for British ports.

---

* See Sir L. West's No. 40, Commercial, February 3, 1888.

That there was no clause either in the Convention now under consideration nor, as far as was known, in any other existing Treaty granting most-favoured-nation treatment to ports nominatim, but that it seemed scarcely reasonable to conclude from the fact that it was the practice specifically to mention "ports" in Commercial Treaties that the Contracting Parties to such Treaties were to be allowed to differentiate in their treatment of a particular ship according to the port of departure from which she sailed.

That it seemed, on the contrary, rather to have been contemplated that the usual Commercial Treaties stipulating for most-favoured-nation treatment in trade and national treatment in navigation were intended to give to each party in the territories of the other the most favoured position possible.

That if the views above put forward were correct, it would appear necessary to consider whether the system involved by the United States' Statute now under consideration did not render the stipulations of the Treaty between the United States and Great Britain illusory.

That the following extreme case, which was merely suggested hypothetically, seemed to put the possible effect of the system now introduced by the United States' Statute in a clear light.

Assuming that the tonnage dues now levied in the United States on ships entered from British ports were raised to such an extent as would make it practically impossible for such ships to sail to United States' ports, and that tonnage dues ceased to be levied in the United States on ships from any but British ports, owing to the abolition of tonnage dues in all ports other than British and United States' ports, then such raising of the tonnage dues in the United States, and such carrying out in all but British ports of the condition required by the United States' Statutes, would change in degree only, but not in nature, the state of things now existing.

Yet in the case supposed, ships would be practically prohibited from sailing to the United States from British ports, while no such prohibition would operate against the ports of any other country.

That the question naturally arose, whether such practical prohibition could be in harmony with a Treaty, the object of which was to render the "commerce and navigation" between the two countries "reciprocally beneficial and satisfactory."

That it was presumed that if that question were answered affirmatively in the case supposed, it must also be answered affirmatively in the existing case.

That in connection with that aspect of the case, Sir Julian Pauncefote was to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No 101, Commercial, 8th April, 1886), inclosing correspondence respecting the claims made by various Powers to have extended to the ports of their territories the exemption provided for by the United States' Statute, without fulfilling the condition therein laid down.

That it was to be observed, however, that the claims discussed in that correspondence were based, not on national treatment clauses such as that contained in the Treaty between this country and the United States, but on most-favoured-nation clauses or clauses of the same nature.

That with regard to the claim put forward in that correspondence by Germany to have extended to her ports, under the most-favoured-nation clause, the exemption from tonnage dues, Sir Julian Pauncefote was to observe that there was no reason to assume that the claim in question was admitted, because although Germany had obtained the exemption, she was entitled to it apart from Treaty stipulations, by reason of the fact, that no tonnage and light dues were levied in German ports by the German Imperial Government.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the above observations and the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to—

1. Whether Her Majesty's Government was entitled, without carrying out the conditions laid down in the United States' Statute of the 19th June, 1886, chapter 421, to claim, under the Treaty of the 3rd July, 1815, for vessels sailing from British to United States' ports similar exemptions in the latter to those granted under the Presidential Proclamation of the 26th January last to vessels sailing from German to United States' ports, or to similar exemptions to those granted to vessels sailing from any other ports with regard to which similar Presidential Proclamations had been issued under the provisions of the United States' Statute in question.

2. Whether Her Majesty's Government was entitled also, without carrying out the condition laid down in the above-mentioned United States' Statute, to claim, under the Treaty of the 3rd July, 1815, for all British ships arriving in the United States, from whatever port they might proceed, exemptions similar to those granted in the Proclamation of the 26th January last, or any other such Proclamation.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to add that the President of the Board of Trade, on whose behalf, as well as on that of your Lordship, our opinion on the above questions was desired, was anxious to be in a position to deal with the matters involved with the least possible delay.

That your Lordship would, therefore, be greatly obliged if we would favour you with our Report on these questions, and with any observations which the case might suggest to us, at the earliest convenient opportunity.

---

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to report—

Cannot claim exemption without reciprocity.

1. That, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government is not entitled to make the claims stated in the first question without fulfilling the conditions of the United States' Statute.

Entitled to fulfilment of Treaty of 1815.

2. Notwithstanding the condition contained in that Statute, Her Majesty's Government is entitled to claim the fulfilment of the Treaty of 1815, which applies to all British ships from whatever port they may proceed.

This right is entirely independent of any Proclamations under the United States' Statutes of 1884 and 1886.

We have, &c.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, July 17, 1888.

Seizure of British sealers in the Behring's Sea for breach of United States' fishery laws.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, in connection with a telegram which had recently been received at the Admiralty from the Rear-Admiral Commanding-in-chief on the Pacific Station, to the effect that four British sealing-schooners, which were captured on the high seas by American Revenue cruizers for alleged violations of the United States' seal fishery laws in July of last year, were about to be removed by the American authorities from Sitka Island, in the United States' Territory of Alaska, to Port Townshend, in the United States' Territory of Washington.

That the circumstances attending the seizure of those and other British Columbian sealing-vessels in the Behring's Sea, and the grounds on which the United States' Government appeared inclined to justify such seizure, formed the subject of a reference to and Report by us on the 20th August of last year.

That in order to reach Port Townshend it would be necessary for the vessels now in question to pass through the Strait of Juan de Fuca, which separated Vancouver's Island from the opposite United States' Territory of Washington.

That the Strait was, as would be seen from the accompanying chart, which was annexed for convenience of reference, of no great width, and that it was thought probable that the vessels might, in their passage through it, pass within the delimiting line of the British territorial waters.

Right to enforce release when in British waters.

That, although it was conceived that, as a matter of strict right, Her Majesty's Government would be justified in ordering the release, by force, of British vessels which were being escorted through British waters in the custody of foreign cruizers, whether the original capture of such cruizers had been rightful or not, it was not desired, on the present occasion, to take such a course.

Question as to violation of territory justifying a demand for their release.

But that the further question arose (upon which, as well as upon the view expressed above, your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion) as to whether, in the event of those vessels re-entering British waters while in the custody of United States' officials, or under the escort of United States' cruizers, a violation of British territory and jurisdiction would not take place sufficient to justify a demand, on the part of Her Majesty's Government, for the subsequent restoration of the vessels, and that independently of any question as to whether their capture had, in the first instance, been rightful or not.

Case of Peter Martin.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to mention, as bearing upon that question, the case which occurred in 1877 of Peter Martin, an American citizen, who, while under a sentence of imprisonment for an offence against the laws of British Columbia, was, in the course of his conveyance in custody from Laketown to Victoria, taken through United States' territory by the Colonial officials. That his release was thereupon demanded by the United States' Government and conceded by that of Her Majesty. That that case formed the subject of a Report by the then Law Officers, which was inclosed for reference, and of which paragraphs 3–7 seemed specially applicable to the matters at present under consideration.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted in his letter, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

---

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Right to enforce release of sealers when in British waters.

That, in our opinion, as a matter of strict right, Her Majesty's Government would be justified in ordering the release, by force, of British vessels which were being escorted through British waters in the custody of foreign cruizers, whether the original capture by such cruizers were rightful or not.

The passage of captured sealers through British waters justifies a demand for their release.

The conveyance of these captured British vessels, by the United States' officials or cruizers, through British waters, would undoubtedly constitute a violation of the sovereignty of Great Britain, and would justify a demand for the subsequent restoration of the vessels. Whether their capture was, in the first instance, rightful or not is quite immaterial.

Agree with previous Law Officers.

We concur in the opinions of the Law Officers, dated 2nd October, 1876, and 2nd June, 1877, to which your Lordship has been good enough to call our attention.

Matter a question of policy.

We think it right to add that it is, of course, a grave question of policy whether the legal right should be asserted in this case.

My Lord,

Detention of the steam-ship "Tiverton," and arrest of the master.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the correspondence, noted in the margin,* which had passed between the Foreign Office, the Board of Trade, and the North of England Protecting and Indemnity Association, with reference to the arrest of the master of the British screw-steamer "Tiverton," and the temporary detention of that vessel at Brunswick, United States of America, in the month of April last.

That it appeared that the stevedore who was employed by the charterers for the purpose of loading the "Tiverton" had obtained from the Courts of Georgia State (in which the port of Brunswick is situated) a writ of attachment against the cargo of that vessel in respect of his charges, payment of which had been previously demanded and refused.

That the master having announced his intention to put to sea, the officials of the Court proceeded on board for the purpose of executing the writ, and that the master, having refused to allow them to do so, was arrested on the charge of obstructing a United States' officer in the service of a legal process.

That the charge was heard upon the following day, when there being, in the judgment of the Court, no sufficient evidence of forcible obstruction to sustain it, the master was discharged.

Ship released on bail.

That the ship, however, appeared to have been detained a short time longer until bail was given to meet the stevedore's claim, when she was permitted to proceed upon her voyage.

Diplomatic intervention refused.

That the intervention of Her Majesty's Government on behalf of the master and owners of the "Tiverton" was subsequently invoked by the North of England Protecting and Indemnity Association, but that as the owners had not at present exhausted the legal remedies open to them in the Courts of the State of Georgia, and that as it had not been shown that the proceedings complained of were in any respect contrary to the law in force in that State, or amounted in themselves to a patent denial of justice, Her Majesty's Government had hitherto felt themselves unable to accede to the request.

Proposed letter to Board of Trade.

That in those circumstances your Lordship was disposed to suggest to the Board of Trade that a further letter in the terms of the inclosed draft should be addressed to the Association in answer to their last communication; but that before doing so your Lordship would be glad if we would take the correspondence transmitted with Sir Philip Currie's letter into our consideration, and favour you with our opinion as to whether the terms of the draft were right and proper.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Approve reply refusing to intervene except in case of denial of justice.

That, in our opinion, the terms of the draft submitted to us are right and proper.

circumstances arising out of the seizure of the steam-ship "Tiverton" at Brunswick, United States of America, and asking what answer should be returned thereto.

In reply, I am to state that, in the opinion of Lord Salisbury, the Association should be informed that, until the contrary is proved, the law of Georgia must be assumed to be as set forth in the inclosed despatch from Mr. Cridland, Her Majesty's Consul at Charleston,[*] and as actually put in force by the local Tribunal.

If there has been any illegality or irregularity, the remedy of the parties aggrieved is by appeal to the Tribunals of Georgia, and it is only in case of a patent denial or delay of justice that diplomatic interference could properly be resorted to.

I am to return herewith the original inclosures which accompanied the Board of Trade letters of the 14th and 18th September.

Royal Courts of Justice, November 28, 1888.

My Lord,

Seizure of British seal-schooners in Behring's Sea.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the inclosed Report, dated the 7th July last, of a Committee of the Canadian Privy Council upon the present position of the cases of the Canadian sealing-schooners which had been seized from time to time by the United States' authorities in Behring's Sea.

That other papers and correspondence bearing on the same subject were also inclosed,[†] and amongst them Sir Julian Pauncefote was to direct our more particular attention to the following documents:—

1. Colonial Office letter of the 20th October, and Memorandum thereon, dated the 23rd October, by the Honourable F. Bertie, of the Foreign Office;
2. The Report on the question with which we favoured your Lordship on the 20th August of last year, Confidential No. 5597, p. 97; and
3. The instructions, based on that Report, which were subsequently forwarded to Her Majesty's Minister at Washington. (To Sir L. West, 10th September, 1887.)

That the contents of that despatch were duly communicated by Her Majesty's Minister to the United States' Government on the 23rd September, 1887 (see Sir L. West's No. 272 of the 23rd September, 1887).

That it was not, however, considered by Her Majesty's Government expedient during the pendency of the Fisheries Conference at Washington, which began its sittings shortly afterwards, to press the question more urgently upon the attention of the Government of the United States, and that in fact no detailed reply to those representations had as yet been received from them.

That it was considered, moreover, that it would be impolitic to take any further action in the matter until the Presidential and general elections, which were then imminent, in the United States, were concluded, but that it would thereafter become necessary to decide what further representations (if any) should be made.

Question as to resort to diplomatic redress.

That it was suggested in the Minute of the Dominion Privy Council that the owners of the vessels seized should not be compelled to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States against the decisions of the State Tribunals, but that diplomatic redress should alone and at once be resorted to.

Jurisdiction of United States' Courts.

That it was, moreover, pointed out that some doubts existed as to whether such appeals would lie, and that the giving of bonds to secure the release of the vessels might involve an admission of the jurisdiction of the Courts of the United States in the matter, while it was of course contended that, inasmuch as the seizures in question took place upon the high seas, those Courts could have no such jurisdiction.

That it was thought possible that if those appeals were not prosecuted to the final Tribunals, the United States' Government might attempt to put forward the contention, that the owners had a legal remedy in those Courts which they neglected to seek, and that they had thus forfeited their right to diplomatic intervention.

That, on the other hand, it was conceived that the position which Her Majesty's Government could properly take up with respect to such a contention would be that they, as a Government, were not concerned with, nor bound by, the steps either taken, or neglected to be taken, by the owners as private individuals; but that, as a Government, they were entitled to demand, and did demand, reparation for the violation of their flag upon the high seas, which was an international claim, and as such, only capable of vindication and adjustment through diplomatic channels.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the Minute of the Canadian Privy Council of the 7th July into our consideration, together with the other papers transmitted with his letter, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion upon the various points raised therein, and with any general observations which we might have to offer upon the present position of, and method of dealing with, those claims.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to report—

As to deferring discussion till after settlement of appeal.

That it could not be successfully contended by the United States of America that the communications which have passed between the Governments of Great Britain and the United States constitute an agreement that the discussion of the question of international right should be held over until after the decision of the Appellate Court in the United States upon the points raised in the proceedings there; but, assuming such an agreement to exist, we are of opinion that no claim should at present be made by Her Majesty's Government, except that the proceedings in the Appellate Court should be expedited by the United States' Government as far as possible. We are of opinion that the giving of bonds in this Appeal would not involve any admission of the jurisdiction of the United States' Courts, as the bonds merely represent the vessels which were, in fact, under arrest; but it would be advisable, in any communication on the subject to the United States' Government, to make it quite clear that Great Britain does not admit that any justification can possibly be found for the seizure of these vessels upon the high seas, and that the claim for compensation on that ground will be maintained, whatever may be the decision of the Appellate Court. We see no reason to modify our opinion upon this point given on the 20th August, 1887.

Giving of bonds not an admission of jurisdiction.

Should make it clear that claim will be pressed in any event.

If politic, claim may now be pressed.

Unless, from considerations of policy, it be thought desirable to postpone urging the claim of the owners of the vessels upon the United States' Government until after the determination of the appeal, we are of opinion that the claim for compensation may now properly be pressed.

My Lord,

Foreign Enlistment Act. As to position of Venezuela with regard to.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 21st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office[*] (together with the papers noted in the accompanying list), in which the question was raised whether the Republic of Venezuela was, under present circumstances, to be considered by Her Majesty's Government a "friendly State" within the meaning of "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870" (33 & 34 Vict., cap. 90).

Suspension of relations.

That in February of last year the Venezuelan Government suspended relations with that of Her Majesty in connection with the controversy then proceeding between the two Governments as to the boundary between the Colony of British Guiana and Venezuela.

That the British Minister shortly afterwards left Carácas and returned to this country.

That diplomatic relations between the two Governments had not yet been renewed, nor had the immediate prospect of a renewal been improved by the vigorous action which Her Majesty's Government lately found it necessary to take in order to vindicate the claims of the owners of the vessels "Henrietta" and "Josephine."

That it was thought to be not impossible that persons who were hostile to the present Government of Venezuela might attempt to utilize Her Majesty's possessions in the West Indies, and more especially the Island of Trinidad, for purposes which might, were normal diplomatic relations existing between Venezuela and this country, amount to an infraction of the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act; and that the question arose whether a State, which had of its own motion suspended friendly relations with Her Majesty's Government, and had maintained during such suspension the attitude and language adopted during the last twelve months by the Venezuelan Government to that of the Queen, was still to be considered a "friendly State" within the meaning of that enactment, and as such entitled to the benefit of the provisions of that Act to the same extent as though friendly diplomatic relations were still subsisting between the two Governments.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the question submitted in that letter, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Venezuela a "friendly State."

That, in our opinion, Venezuela is a "friendly State," that is to say, "a foreign State at peace with Her Majesty," within the meaning of "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870."

Act can be enforced.

It is therefore competent to Her Majesty's Government to enforce the provisions of that Act against persons who engage in hostile expeditions directed against that country.

Danger of infringing Act.

We have only to add that, having regard to existing circumstances, it might involve this country in further complication if any serious attempt to infringe the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act were overlooked or disregarded.

My Lord,

Consular jurisdiction in Zanzibar. Proposed Order in Council.

That, by the Siamese Order in Council of the 28th July, 1856, section 1, and by the China and Japan Order in Council of the 9th March, 1865, Part VII, section 84 (of which copies were inclosed), power was given to Her Majesty's Representative to make Regulations for peace, order, and good government, and for enforcing the observance of Treaties; and that, under that general power, the observance of certain local Laws of general application had been imposed on British subjects in China (as regarded the sale of munitions of war), in Japan (as regarded pilotage and quarantine), and in Siam (as regarded the sale of opium).

That we should perceive that in the present draft the terms of the general power had been amplified so as to give express authority for the above purpose.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, at our earliest convenience, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the proposed Order in Council might properly be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's gracious approval.

We have taken the matter into consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to report—

REPORTS BY THE LAW OFFICERS OF THE CROWN: 1889.

AFRICA.

No. 1 A.

[Colonial Office.]

The Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Knutsford.

[Transmitted to the Foreign Office by the Colonial Office in their Letter of February 2, 1889.*]

Royal Courts of Justice, January 31, 1889.

My Lord,

Proposed South African Customs Union.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Robert Herbert's letter of the 23rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for our opinion and advice, the inclosed copies of a Bill passed by the Legislature of the Cape of Good Hope for the purpose of so altering the Customs Tariff of the Colony as to enable it to enter a proposed South African Customs Union.

Local Acts.

That Sir Robert Herbert was to inclose copies of certain correspondence which had taken place since the receipt of the Bill in this country between the Colonial Office, the Foreign Office, and the Governor, together with copies of local Acts, Foreign Office Memoranda, and of a Parliamentary Paper referred to in, or bearing upon, the correspondence.

New Act sanctioned, but not promulgated.

That the Bill, which was reserved by the Governor for the signification of Her Majesty's pleasure, had, as we should gather from the correspondence, been since assented to by Her Majesty in Council; but that the Governor had been directed not to issue the Proclamation necessary under section 1 to bring it into force, pending the receipt of assurances from the Colony that it would be so amended as to avoid giving ground of complaint to those foreign countries which, by Treaty, enjoyed most-favoured-nation rights in the Cape of Good Hope.

That, for the purposes of the present case, it might be taken that the Act, in so far as it favoured the commerce of Natal, or any other British possession in South Africa, need not be regarded as contravening the most favoured-nation rights of foreign countries. That the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown of the 14th January, 1882,† appeared to bear out that view.

Distinction between land and sea commerce.

That it would also appear from the correspondence that a distinction might be drawn by the Cape Colony (as it was by many foreign countries, notwithstanding their being bound by most-favoured-nation Treaties) between favours conferred on commerce by land and favours conferred on commerce by sea, and that it was only in so far as the Cape Act conferred favours on the commerce of foreign countries (being members of the Customs Union) brought to the Cape Colony by sea that the new Cape Law was open to objection from a diplomatic point of view.

1889

Draft despatch to Cape Colony.

That Sir Robert Herbert was to direct our special attention to the draft despatch to the Governor of the Cape which formed an inclosure to the Colonial Office letter to the Foreign Office of the 27th December, and to submit for our consideration the following questions:—

1. Whether that despatch correctly indicated the objections to the Customs Union Act in its present form, and the points in which it was at variance with the rights, under most-favoured-nation clauses, to which some foreign countries were entitled in the Cape Colony; and

2. Whether the amendments to the Act proposed in that despatch, and shown in the annexed copy of that Act marked (A), would remove the objections above referred to; whether they were proper and sufficient, and, if not, Sir Robert Herbert was to request that we would be good enough to suggest such other and further amendments as would be sufficient for the object in view.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and in obedience to your Lordship's commands have the honour to

Report—

Draft correct as to objections to Act, and m.-f.-n. clauses.

That, in our opinion, the draft despatch does correctly indicate the objections to the Customs Union Act in its present form, and the points in which its provisions might conflict with the rights of other nations under the most-favoured-nation clauses of Treaties.

Objections to Act not removed.

2. We are of opinion that the amendments of the Act shown in the copy marked (A), and referred to in the passage inclosed in red ink brackets on p. 21 of the draft despatch, would not remove the objections referred to.

Cannot distinguish between land and sea trade;

We think the distinction between goods imported by land and goods imported by sea cannot be supported, and we agree in the views expressed by Sir Edward Hertslet in his Memorandum of the 10th August, 1880.

except as to local produce.

In our judgment, as a general principle, the only case in which such a distinction can be justified is in the case of Frontier Regulations between two States having a common boundary, respecting the interchange of local produce.

Difficulty as to Treaties.

Assuming our view to be correct, we need only call attention to the most-favoured-nation clause in the German Treaty of the 30th May, 1865 (see p. 16 of Parliamentary Paper C.—3735), as one, among others, upon which difficulty might well arise.

Effect of Act.

The Acts 20 of 1870, 22 of 1884, and 16 of 1887, must, we assume, be accepted as existing legislation; but we must note that it is exceedingly difficult to say what the effect of section 2 of the Act No. 39 of 1888 upon those Acts is; in our opinion, however, the principle of the provisions to which attention has been called should not be extended.

Paragraphs to be omitted.

The paragraphs in schedule (B) numbered in red 1, 2, 3, 4, and the note numbered 5, and the series of asterisks to which the note refers, should be struck out.

We have, &c.

Annex.

Draft of Despatch to Governor Sir H. Robinson.

Sir,

Downing Street, January , 1889.

HER Majesty's Government have given most careful consideration to the Reserved Bill for enabling the Cape Colony to join in a South African Customs Union, which was inclosed in your despatch No. 140 of the 19th September.

I need not recapitulate the telegraphic correspondence which has since passed, and I therefore proceed to inform you of the nature of the difficulty which has been experienced in dealing with the request of your Ministers that the Reserved Bill should be at once and unconditionally sanctioned by Her Majesty.

In my despatch No. 45 of the 26th June last it was intimated that a serious question might arise as to whether the terms of the proposed Customs Union, in so far as they include the Orange Free State, or any other independent State, might not be held to be at variance with certain of the Commercial Treaties between this country and foreign States whereby such States have become entitled to most-favoured-nation treatment in the Cape Colony.

This question has again been fully considered with reference to the provisions of the Reserved Bill. Much diplomatic and other correspondence has at various times taken place upon this subject, and the examination of this correspondence has necessarily occupied considerable time.

A reference to the existing Commercial Treaties showed that, besides five cases where the text was of doubtful construction (viz., Belgium, Denmark, Persia, Portugal, and Sweden and Norway), fifteen countries enjoy most-favoured-nation rights in respect to imports into the Cape Colony. A Schedule of the Treaties referred to is appended to this despatch.

The Cape Trading and Customs Returns for 1887 showed that five of these countries had in that year carried on direct trade with the Cape Colony, viz.:—

| Country. | Trade. |
|---|---|
| | £ |
| Argentine Republic .. .. .. | 1,031 |
| Chile .. .. .. .. .. | 179 |
| Germany .. .. .. | 67,561 |
| Spanish Colonies .. .. .. | 4,438 |
| Turkey .. .. .. .. | 33 |

On reviewing the existing Customs legislation of the Cape Colony, as contained in the Acts noted in the margin,* it was perceived that the principle of granting specially favourable treatment to imports from the inland border States and to certain kinds of South African produce was not new, and had not been objected to.

The difficulties in respect of such legislation which have now been brought under the notice of Her Majesty's Government did not then probably come directly under consideration, but however that may be, it is now clearly held that a like acquiescence cannot be given to such legislation at the present time; and I may point out that the measure now under consideration presents some new features.

The privileges conferred by the Reserved Act are of two kinds: (1) there are those granted to the produce of all South Africa; and (2) those which are granted to the produce and manufactures of States and Colonies which are members of the Customs Union.

Since 1870 the following articles, the produce of South Africa, have been exempted from import duty, viz., feathers, fish, green fruit, hides, horns, ivory, fish-oil, ore, and skins. These exemptions, with the exception of that on fish-oil and ore, are continued by Schedule (B) of the present measure, and to the exceptions already existing are added:—

(α.) "All raw produce of South Africa."
(β.) Angora hair the produce of South Africa.
(γ.) Tobacco the produce of South Africa.

Green fruit is put on the general free list.

The exemptions in the Act of 1870, however little defensible in principle, having regard to Treaty obligations, were perhaps in fact at the time confined to objects of purely local trade; but a general exemption of tobacco grown anywhere in "South Africa," however that term may be defined, and however the tobacco may be imported, might obviously be a cause of grievance to any State which is entitled to most-favoured-nation treatment, but the subjects of which continue to be liable to pay duty on the tobacco which they may import into the Cape Colony.

I pass on to the favours granted to States and Colonies who become members of the Customs Union.

As regards British Colonies, I may say at once that Her Majesty's Government desire to raise no question. As at present advised, they are of opinion that favours granted by one British Colony to another are not a violation of a most-favoured-nation clause of the ordinary kind, although there may be particular cases where a foreign country is specifically entitled by Treaty to the same treatment as British Colonies. The question, therefore, need only now be considered so far as concerns foreign States members of the Customs Union.

* Act 20 of 1870; Act 22 of 1884; Act 16 of 1887.

I may premise that Her Majesty's Government are fully aware that the Orange Free State is not a manufacturing country, nor likely to become one; that it exports but few articles to the Cape Colony for consumption of a value which is to be measured, perhaps, in at most hundreds of pounds sterling; and that the same observations apply in a general way to the South African Republic, which might possibly one day become a member of the Customs Union. Moreover, such trade as there is, or may be, from the Orange Free State to the Cape Colony must be overland trade. But these considerations, as Her Majesty's Government are advised, are not material in considering any claim which might be raised by a foreign country to treatment in the Cape Colony equally favourable to that accorded to the Orange Free State or other South African State, a member of the Union. The question in assessing the duty, say, on a consignment of German jewellery imported at Cape Town would not be whether the jewellery is, in fact, manufactured in the Orange Free State and imported into the Cape Colony, but whether, if it were so imported, it would be free of duty; and there can be no doubt that, under the terms of the Reserved Bill, it would be admitted free, whether it came by land or by sea.

It has been suggested that the favours conferred on the foreign States members of the Union, being conditional, could only be claimed by other foreign States (even although possessing most-favoured-nation rights) on condition of entering the Union. But Her Majesty's Government are unable to accept this suggestion, because many Commercial Treaties contain, besides the ordinary most-favoured-nation clause, a provision that each party will grant unconditionally to the other any favour that it confers upon a third Power. [The solution of the difficulty which occurs to Her Majesty's Government as most simple and feasible is to restrict the operation of the Act to importations overland.] If this were done, there would appear to be no practical difficulty in placing all most favoured nations on precisely the same footing as the members of the Union, if they or any of them should claim to be so treated.

The precise form which the amendment of the Act for this object should take will be considered without delay.

I have already intimated to you that, without the assurance of some legislation in this sense, Her Majesty's Government could not authorize you to issue the Proclamation which is necessary to bring the new legislation into force.

It has been suggested that one mode of dealing with the difficulty would be to confirm the Act and bring it into operation, leaving it open to any foreign nation entitled to most-favoured-nation treatment to raise its claim, should it desire to do so, to be placed on the same footing as is secured by the Act to any foreign South African State.

It may, however, be reasonably apprehended that, if one such foreign State were to apply for and receive that privilege, others would raise a similar claim.

This in itself would occasion a great loss to the Cape revenue; but it must further be remembered that, if a like concession were not made to British traders, they would be placed at an intolerable disadvantage as compared with foreign traders, while, if such concession were made to them, the revenue of the Cape Colony would be in great part extinguished.

For these reasons, Her Majesty's Government do not think it possible to look in that direction for a solution of the difficulty, and they are consequently of opinion, as I have stated, that it will be necessary to limit the arrangement to goods imported by land.

I have, &c.

My Lord,

Royal Courts of Justice, March 6, 1889.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin,* with reference to the Petition of Mr. G. A. Reece to Her Majesty in Council for special leave to appeal against a sentence passed upon him in Her Majesty's Consular Court at Benin in March of last year.

Petition for leave to appeal.

That the Petition came on for hearing before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in January last, and that, in the result, Mr. Reece had been granted leave to appeal against the sentence of the Consular Court upon depositing the sum of 300*l*. as security for costs.

Former opinion opposed to granting such leave.

That the circumstances of the case formed the subject of, and were briefly stated in, the reference to us of the 8th August last year, when a copy of the Petition, which Mr. Reece's solicitors in this country had inclosed to the Secretary of State, and had stated that they were about to present to Her Majesty in Council on his behalf, was forwarded to us, and we were requested to report whether, in our opinion, any grounds existed for ordering the sentence in question to be submitted for review to the Chief Justice of the West African Settlements under sections 14 and 29 of the West Africa Order, 1885.

That on that occasion we reported that there was, in our opinion, no sufficient ground for ordering such a review of the sentence, and that Messrs. Cooper and Bake were accordingly so informed.

Further grounds put forward for first time.

That it would be observed, however, on comparing the copy of the Petition as lodged at the Privy Council Registry on the 15th January last with that inclosed to the Secretary of State by Messrs. Cooper and Bake in their letter received by him on the 23rd July, 1888, and forwarded to us on the 8th August following, that the grounds of appeal mentioned in paragraphs 14 and 15 of the former document were then brought forward for the first time.

Deportation when permissible.

That, although Mr. Reece was represented at the trial by two native counsel of experience, the point that the Consul had no power under the provisions of the Order in Council (Article 15, Sub-Article (i)) to pass a sentence of deportation, except default in finding proper security for his future good behaviour had previously been made by Mr. Reece, was not taken, nor was it until a few days before the hearing of that gentleman's Petition of Appeal before the Privy Council that your Lordship was made aware, and not even then by Mr. Reece or his legal advisers, of the existence of the particular state of facts upon which the Judicial Committee, as was believed, exclusively based their judgment.

That had the considerations which had induced the Judicial Committee to recommend the grant of Mr. Reece's Petition been properly laid before your Lordship in July last by Messrs. Cooper and Bake, you would have been disposed, subject to our advice and approval, to exercise the power vested in your Lordship by the first paragraph of section 14 of the West Africa Order, 1885, and to remit that portion of the sentence passed on Mr. Reece which ordered his deportation.

Illegality of Consul's sentence of deportation.

That your Lordship was inclined to think that, although the recommendation of the Judicial Committee that Mr. Reece's Petition should be granted was couched in very general language, and was not in terms made on any one specific ground, it might, nevertheless, safely be assumed that any opinion they might have formed as to the probable illegality of the Consul's order was based upon the grounds indicated in paragraphs 14 and 15 of the Petition before them, and was confined to that portion of the sentence dealt with in those paragraphs by which the punishment of deportation was prescribed.

Propose to remit sentence.

That if we should agree in that view, your Lordship would propose to treat the earlier portion of the sentence as not open to impeachment, but that, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, and especially to the probable issue of the appeal—should it be prosecuted—which was now pending before the Judicial Committee, your Lordship would also propose, should we see no objection, forthwith to remit the sentence of deportation, and, in so doing, to call the attention of Mr. Reece to the fact that it was due to his own remissness in not bringing the real facts of the case to the attention of your Lordship in the first instance that your Lordship was not in a position to take that course at an earlier date.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions raised therein, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the present aspect of the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to Sentence should be remitted.

That if, as is now stated for the first time in paragraph 15 of the Petition of the 15th January, 1889, the petitioner was not ordered to give security for good behaviour prior to the sentence of deportation, the course proposed should be adopted, that is to say, the sentence of deportation remitted, and the attention of Mr. Reece and his solicitors called to the fact that, though most specific allegations were made in the Petition forwarded by Messrs. Cooper and Bake to the Secretary of State in July 1888 raising other objections, the point now taken in the Petition of the 15th January, 1889, was never suggested, nor the fact that the petitioner had not been ordered to give security for good behaviour mentioned.

Should ascertain truth of allegation.

It might be as well to ascertain from Consul Johnston that the allegation in paragraph 15 of the Petition is true.

*The Law Officers of the Crown to Colonial Office.

[Transmitted to the Foreign Office by the Colonial Office in their letter of March 25.]

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, March 14, 1889.

Proposed South African Customs Union.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Robert Herbert's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acknowledge the receipt of our Report of the 31st January on the Cape Act for giving effect to the proposed South African Customs Union.

Further papers as to effect of m.-f.-n. clause with regard to.

That since our Report was received the Board of Trade had been consulted on the subject, and that Sir Robert Herbert was to inclose a copy of a Confidential Memorandum drawn up in that Department setting forth the reasons (which were not brought before us when our opinion was previously invited on the question) for holding that most-favoured-nation clauses in Commercial Treaties did not prevent Customs Union arrangements.

That for convenience of reference other Memoranda referred to in the Board of Trade Memorandum were annexed, viz., a set of Memoranda drawn up in 1872 in reference to the proposed commercial reciprocity system between the Australian Colonies, which was subsequently authorized by the Imperial Act 36 Vict., cap. 22, and a Memorandum drawn up by Mr. R. Giffen, of the Board of Trade, in December 1887, upon the question of commercial union between Canada and the United States.

That your Lordship, however, desired Sir Robert Herbert to point out that in referring to those two last-mentioned Memoranda it should be borne in mind that the case with reference to which they were written differed essentially from the present case, and that it would be seen that Mr. Giffen in his Memorandum touched only incidentally in paragraph 20 upon the question as affecting Treaty rights.

That as regarded the Memoranda of 1872 Sir Robert Herbert was to call our special attention to the opinion expressed by Mr. J. B. Bergne, and his reference to the Oldenburg Treaty at p. 5.

That Sir Robert Herbert was also to inclose a copy of a Memorandum drawn up in the Colonial Office in October last advocating the confirmation of the Cape Act, and that, although your Lordship did not wish that document to be accepted as expressing more than the individual opinion of the writer, your Lordship thought it important as showing that there were precedents, both in the action of this and other countries, for holding that most-favoured-nation clauses were not to be literally interpreted where border trade was concerned, or where some arrangement in the nature of neighbourly reciprocity or commercial union was in question.

Proposed limitation in favour of over land trade.

That with regard to that portion of our Report of the 31st ultimo in which we referred to the case of frontier Regulations between "two States, having a common boundary, respecting the interchange of local produce," Sir Robert Herbert was to explain that the Cape Government had lately expressed its readiness to amend the Customs Act by confining the right of free or favoured importation in the case of foreign States, members of the Union, to importation overland.

That the Cape and the Orange Free State, as we were aware, had a common inland frontier, and that the Orange Free State had no access to the sea. That in those circumstances Sir Robert Herbert was to request that we would again consider the subject, and inform your Lordship (1) whether, after considering the arguments and precedents contained in the Memorandum of the Board of Trade, we were of opinion that the view taken by that Department that most-favoured-nation clauses did not prevent an arrangement in the nature of a Customs Union between neighbouring countries, and (2) whether a Customs Union limited as now proposed by the Cape Government in its operation, in regard to foreign States joining the Union, to importations overland, might be brought into operation.

* See also previous Report of the Law Officers to the Colonial Office (Africa, No. 1 A) of January 31, 1889.

That the Cape Customs Act, and other material documents which were previously before us, were inclosed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Report—

M.-f.-n. clauses do operate against proposed Union.

1. That, having fully considered the Memoranda now brought to our notice, we are still of opinion that the "most-favoured-nation" clauses do operate to prevent the establishment of a Customs Union, whereby a foreign State obtains privileges as to goods sent into British territory which are denied to nations whose Treaties with Great Britain contain such clauses.

Proposed limitation does not remove objection founded on m.-f.-n. clauses.

2. In our opinion, the limitation of the effect of such Customs Union to goods imported overland does not remove the objection founded upon these clauses.

Objection in previous case.

We note that in the case of the Commercial Treaty between China and France for the grant of more favourable terms in respect of goods imported by land through Cochin China than were in force as to goods imported by sea, the Board of Trade made objection that this concession violated the "most-favoured-nation" clauses, and the Foreign Office only refrained from pressing such objection on the ground that the matter was not of practical importance.

The principle laid down should be maintained.

We do not express an opinion as to how far the small value of the trade of the independent State which it is proposed to admit to the Union may render it probable that no exception to the measure will be taken by Germany, but we think it desirable that the principle we have laid down should be maintained, even if, in some trifling cases, its strict application may be dispensed with.

[After quoting the terms of the reference printed below, dated the 1st March, 1889, they report as on page 9 :—]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, March 1, 1889.

Circumstances attending death of native members of Niger Co.'s expedition under Herr Zweifel.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquis of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list,* with reference to the circumstances attendant upon the death of certain native members of an exploring expedition which was dispatched by the Royal Niger Company into the interior of their territories under the leadership of Herr Zweifel. (Colonial Office, June 16, 1888, Print, Section 3, p. 2, No. 2; Sir S. Rowe, May 19, 1888, Print, Section 3, Inclosure 1 in No. 2, pp. 2 and 3; Report by Sir J. Marshall, Inclosure 5 in No. 2, Print, Section 3, pp. 7-13.)

In December 1887 Herr Zweifel collected a party of about 160 natives of the Timannee, Susa, and Lamba tribes at the back of Sierra Leone, for the purposes of the expedition.

These natives were apparently selected with special reference to their experience in rubber and gums and similar products, but the Niger Company state that the object of the expedition was not so much the collection of those articles as the exploration of the interior with a view to develop the resources of the Company. These objects, it is stated, were fully explained to the natives. Of these, some sixty were armed with rifles, fifteen had revolvers, twenty had swords and cutlasses, besides the native "machetes" (knives) which they carried.

Nationality of Herr Zweifel.

Herr Zweifel himself, a gentleman well known on the coast, was, it is believed, of German nationality, and had been in the service of the "Compagnie du Sénégal," from whom he had received high recommendations, having had considerable experience in the class of work for which he was engaged by the Niger Company. (Royal Niger Company, June 23, 1888, Print, Section 3, p. 13.)

He was intrusted by the Company with the entire management and control of the whole expedition and its officers, which included three Europeans besides himself.

The expedition left Sierra Leone on the 14th December, and though symptoms of discontent were shown by the men from time to time, no serious trouble threatened until they reached Loko in the interior on the 4th March. From that time until they arrived at Lokojah, the scene of the disaster, eleven days later, the expedition suffered severely from want of food, both in quantity and quality, and by the time they reached Lokojah would seem to have been in a demoralized and mutinous condition.

Mutiny of native members of expedition.

While remaining at Lokojah this discontent appears to have ripened into insubordination, and some of the men complained that they were not being employed in accordance with the terms of their agreement—to cut rubber—but only on travelling work, and accordingly declined to go on any further.

Assistance of Mr. Wallace in suppressing.

They then proceeded, in defiance of orders, to break out of the inclosure where they were confined to prevent complications with the local natives, and made such threatening demonstrations that Herr Zweifel summoned Mr. Wallace (the Company's agent in those parts) to his assistance, and he, at Herr Zweifel's request, brought an armed force, consisting of twelve of the local police and a native contingent, to protect the safety of the Europeans of the expedition.

After vain efforts had been made to bring the natives to obedience by persuasion and threats on the part of Mr. Wallace and Herr Zweifel, the attempt was made, with only partial success, to induce them to give up their arms, and on some of them advancing in a threatening attitude, one of the Headmen was shot dead by Mr. Wallace.

Attack of natives on Europeans repelled with loss of 6 killed and 30 wounded.

This seems to have been followed by a rush of the natives in force on the Europeans, by whom they were received with a volley, the Europeans and their native followers being armed with rifles and revolvers.

This resulted in the death of six of the natives of the expedition on the spot, and the wounding of thirty, of whom one died subsequently, while the remainder fled, the majority finding their way back to Sierra Leone, where they laid their complaint before the Governor, and some reaching Lagos, whence they were sent back by the Colonial authorities to Sierra Leone.

Shortly after the occurrences in question Lokojah was visited by Sir James Marshall, the Chief Justice of the Niger Territories, who investigated the facts and examined witnesses, including Mr. Wallace and Herr Zweifel.

The evidence elicited by Sir James Marshall and the depositions of the natives, taken before the Police Magistrate of Freetown, appear to agree as regards all the main facts of the case. (See Report of Sir J. Marshall. Inclosure 5 in Colonial Office letter of June 16, 1888; and also Inclosure 3 in the same letter, pp. 7-13, and pp. 3-7 of Print, Section 3.)

Herr Zweifel passed through Sierra Leone by the same steamer on which many of the natives of his expedition returned, but as there was some doubt in the minds of the authorities as to the legality of arresting him he was not interfered with. (Sir S. Rowe, July 27, 1888, Print, Section 9, p. 1.)

It now appears from some of the depositions taken at Sierra Leone that some of the men are British subjects, and it seems also possible that some of those killed may have held a similar status. (Colonial Office, July 26, 1888, Print, Section 7, p. 1.)

It is believed that Herr Zweifel is now in Germany or elsewhere upon the Continent, and that Mr. Wallace is at the Niger. (Royal Niger Company, November 19, 1888.)

Can Herr Zweifel and Mr. Wallace be tried for murder?

The question arises whether the shooting of these natives was, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, clearly justifiable as a measure of self-defence and for the preservation of the lives and discipline of the remainder of the expedition, or whether there is primâ facie ground for placing Herr Zweifel and Mr. Wallace, or either of them, on their trial for murder if found within the jurisdiction of a competent Court.

In the latter event, a further question arises as to whether any, and, if any, what steps should be taken, and by whom and where, to bring these persons to trial.

It is presumed that the Chief Justice of the Niger Territories would have had jurisdiction to try both of them. (See Royal Niger Company's Charter of July 13, 1886, Article 8, and Regulation (D) for Administration of Justice to Foreigners made thereunder.)

Moreover, as regards Mr. Wallace, who is a British subject, I am to bring to your attention the printed correspondence annexed respecting the trial of certain British subjects at Sierra Leone for the murder of a slave-girl at Onitsha, on the River Niger, in 1880.

In that case as in the present the offence alleged was committed outside of Her Majesty's dominions, and a Commission was issued under the provisions of 46 Geo. III, cap. 54, and 57 Geo. III, cap. 53, for the trial of the offenders, who were eventually convicted of manslaughter, and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment.

But the case of Herr Zweifel, who is believed to be a German subject, and to be at large, does not come within the Anglo-German Extradition Treaty (see Law Officers' Reports, "Germany," of March 3 and March 14, 1888), and it is conceived that he would not be justiciable, either in the United Kingdom or in any British Colony, in respect of a crime committed in the Niger Territories.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion on the questions submitted in this letter, and with any general observations which you may have to offer on the case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) JULIAN PAUNCEFOTE.

---

We have taken the matter into our consideration and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Mr. Wallace should be prosecuted. Form of procedure.

That, in our opinion, there is primâ facie ground for placing Herr Zweifel and Mr. Wallace on their trial on a charge of murder or manslaughter; and that the Company should be called upon to take steps to secure the institution and proper conduct of such a prosecution in the case of Mr. Wallace before the Chief Justice of the Niger Territories.

Having regard to the fact that Mr. Wallace is himself one of the principal officers of the Niger Company, we think the actual conduct of the prosecution should be in the hands of persons instructed by, and responsible to, some official upon the Coast who is in Her Majesty's service, and is not connected with the Niger Company.

Herr Zweifel not justiciable in any British Court; cannot be extradited.

We are of opinion that Herr Zweifel is not justiciable in any British Court, and could not be tried under any Commission issued under the Statutes of George III. No demand for his surrender can be addressed to the German Government.

Right of Niger Co. to levy an annual sum as interest on

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. Villiers Lister's letter of the 27th April last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the right of the capital expended in taking over Protectorate.

1889

Royal Niger Company to levy the annual sum of 12,500*l.* as interest on the capital sum of 250,000*l.* expended by them for the purposes mentioned in Article XIV of the Charter granted to them on the 10th July, 1886 (see Confidential Print 5610, Part I of "Correspondence respecting the Royal Niger Company, 1885-87," p. 8).

Sanction of H. M.'s Govt.

That it would be seen on reference to pp. 195, 232, 236, and 237 of the abovementioned volume of printed papers, as well as to pp. 11, 14, 49, 54, 55, 64, and 68 of Part II of the same series (Print 5753), that Her Majesty's Government gave very careful consideration to the point before finally sanctioning the levy of the sum in question.

Objection of German Government.

That it was, however, objected to by the German Government (ibid., p. 283), on the ground that it was contrary to an agreement entered into between Great Britain and Germany in 1885, and recorded in a note from the German Ambassador in this country of the 2nd June, 1885, of which a copy was inclosed.

Construction to be put on Ct. Münster's note.

That a correspondence then ensued between the two Governments, which would be found in the papers marginally noted,* from which it would appear that the chief point now at issue was the proper construction to be put upon the words of Count Münster's note which ran, "Zölle sollen nur insoweit erhoben werden, als dies zur Deckung der durch die Uebernahme der Schutzherrschaft entstehenden Kosten für erforderlich erachtet wird," or freely translated into English, "The only duties leviable shall be those deemed necessary to cover expenses incurred through the taking over of the Protectorate."

That the words underlined† were the literal translation of the German words "durch die Uebernahme der Schutzherrschaft."

That the German contention was that that should only be taken to mean expenses incurred after the Protectorate was taken over by this country; whilst the argument put forth by Her Majesty's Government was that the sense and spirit of the Agreement and of the words themselves was that they covered all expenses incurred in connection with the taking over of the Protectorate, including the expenses entailed upon the Company in the negotiation of the Treaties which alone made the assumption of the Protectorate, and the grant of the Charter, possible.

That Sir T. Villiers Lister was to request that we would take the foregoing observations, together with the papers transmitted with his letter, into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the contention of Her Majesty's Government was well founded.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to

Report—

Effect of arrangement of 1885 on right of Niger Co. to levy duties.

That if the question raised in this case is to be decided by a consideration of the exact terms of the arrangement made in the year 1885, there might be some difficulty in supporting the right of the Niger Company to levy dues to meet the sum of 12,500*l.* interest upon the sum of 250,000*l.*, which appears to have been agreed by Her Majesty's Government as being the amount expended by them in the acquisition, maintenance, and execution of the Treaty rights.

It is, however, to be observed that the terms of the arrangement are somewhat differently worded in the several documents which are before me.

In the letter of Sir T. Villiers Lister of the 27th April, 1889, the words are rendered, "The only duties leviable shall be those deemed necessary to cover expenses incurred through the taking over of the Protectorate."

In Lord Granville's letter of the 16th May, 1885 ("Africa No. 6," p. 3), the words are, "Duties will be levied solely for the purpose of meeting the expenses necessary to enable them to carry out the obligations imposed upon them" (the Government) "by the Protectorate;" and in Count Münster's letter of the 2nd June, 1885 (No. 6 in the same document), the words are translated, "Customs shall only be raised to such an amount as may be considered sufficient to cover the expenses arising from the taking over of the Protectorate."

H. M.'s Govt. are sole judges of amount to be levied in British Protectorate if it relates to expense of establishing Protectorate.

But, whatever may be the proper rendering of the arrangement, in my opinion, Her Majesty's Government are the sole judges of the amounts which are properly to be regarded as within that arrangement, so far as the British Protectorate is concerned, the German Government having the same rights respecting the German Protectorate; and unless it could be alleged that Her Majesty's Government were sanctioning duties which had no connection with the arrangement as to expenses incurred in establishing the Protectorate, it would, in my opinion, be improper to admit that the German Government, or any other Gouernment, can—so to speak—revise, or adjudicate upon, the amount so settled, or ascertained, by Her Majesty's Government.

I understand the Report, under date the 6th March, 1888, signed by Sir William Sargeaunt (set out at pp. 64 and 65 of No. 5753 of 1888), to have been adopted by Her Majesty's Government, and to be in effect a recognition that the Niger Company have expended 250,000*l.* in the acquisition, maintenance, and execution of Treaty rights.

I think that this fairly comes within the words of the arrangement, and that whatever form of words be adopted, at any rate Her Majesty's Government are the sole judges in the matter.

Question depends on construction put upon Ct. Münster's note.

That, in my opinion, this question depends upon the ascertainment of the exact meaning of the terms used by Count Münster in his letter of the 2nd June, 1885, which was accepted by the Foreign Office as correctly reciting the agreement then arrived at between the two Governments.

I observe that the important sentence in that letter is differently translated in the documents now before me.

In the covering letter the words are, "The only duties leviable shall be those deemed necessary to cover expenses incurred through the taking over of the Protectorate." But, in the Memorandum which records the negotiations of April 1885, which resulted in the letter from Lord Granville of the 16th May, and Count Münster's answer of the 2nd June of that year, the same sentence is thus translated: "Duties shall only be levied to the extent that may be considered necessary to cover the expenditure incurred in consequence of the assumption of the Protectorate." And in the printed translation of Count Münster's letter given in "Africa No. 6 (1885)," I find the translation is in the following words: "Customs shall only be raised to such an amount as may be considered sufficient to cover the expenses arising from the taking over of the Protectorate."

The two last-quoted renderings make the passage closely correspond with the assurance given by Lord Granville that the "duties will be levied solely for the purpose of meeting the expenses necessary to enable them to carry out the obligations imposed upon them by the Protectorates."

Doubts whether compensation to Niger Co. for expenditure, as described in their Memo., could be considered part of cost of taking over Protectorate.

If I had to construe the English sentence given in the covering letter as the equivalent of Count Münster's words, I should have no doubt that it would justify the imposition of duties in respect of expenditure made, or liabilities incurred, by Her Majesty's Government in the acquisition of the Protectorate; but the other translations which were accepted at a time when this question had not arisen, and are supported by Lord Granville's language, would not, in my opinion, sanction the levying of such duties. And I entertain serious doubt whether compensation to be paid to the Niger Company in respect of such expenditure as is described in the Memorandum of the Vice-Chairman of the Company, dated the 27th January, 1886 ("Niger Correspondence," Part I, p. 212), and in the Memoranda of Mr. Taubman-Goldie of the 24th October, 1887 ("Niger Correspondence," Part I, p. 214), and of the 16th February, 1888 ("Niger Correspondence," Part II, p. 50), could be considered as part of the cost of taking over the Protectorate upon any sound construction of the language used by Count Münster.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received June 8.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, June 7, 1889.

Is "foreign Protectorate" included in term "dominions of a friendly State" as employed in Foreign Enlistment Act?

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 20th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list,* in connection with a question which had arisen as to whether a foreign Protectorate was included within the meaning of the term "dominions of a friendly State," as employed in "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870" (33 & 34 Vict., cap. 90), so as to render the provisions of that Act, and more especially of section 11 thereof, applicable to recruiting operations carried out on British soil for the purposes of an expedition designed against the Government of a Protectorate of a Power friendly to Great Britain.

That the circumstances under which the question had arisen for determination were briefly as follows:—

Contemplated attack on Damaraland (German Protectorate) by Mr. Lewis, a British subject.

That in March last a representation was made to Her Majesty's Government by the German Ambassador at the Court of St. James' to the effect that a British subject named Lewis, who had certain claims, hitherto unrecognized, against the German Government in connection with concessions alleged to have been made to him by the native Chiefs of the Damara region, was recruiting forces within the limits of Cape Colony with a view of attacking the authorities of the German Protectorate which had now been established in Damaraland.

Enforcement of Foreign Enlistment Act by Cape Govt.

That "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870," was, in accordance with the provisions to that effect in section 3 thereof, put into force by the Government of Cape Colony on the 28th September, 1870, by Proclamation duly published in the "Cape Government Gazette."

Is Foreign Enlistment Act applicable to such cases?

That inquiries which were at once instituted by Her Majesty's Government on receipt of the German Ambassador's representation had proved that the fears of the German Imperial Government were in that particular instance fortunately groundless, but that the general question of the applicability of the Foreign Enlistment Act to cases of that kind having thus accidentally arisen, appeared to your Lordship to be of such importance that you were desirous of at once obtaining our opinion with regard to it.

That it was clear that territory over which a British Protectorate had been proclaimed on behalf of Her Majesty was not for the purposes of the Act part of the British dominions, and that assuming the word "dominions" to be used in an analogous sense in the expression "dominions of a friendly State," it would also appear that territory over which a friendly Power had extended its protection could hardly be included within that expression.

German Protectorate not part of State domain.

That the Protectorates, for instance, of the German Empire were not considered to form an integral portion of the State domain, and were technically termed "Schutzgebiet" (or State-protected territory) in contradistinction to "Reichsgebiet" (or the domain of the Imperial State).

That at the time the Foreign Enlistment Act was passed the modern system of Protectorates had not attained its present development, and that is was probable that the occurrence of such a case as that to which our attention was now invited was not contemplated by the Legislature.

That if, however, such a case should be considered not to fall within the provisions of the existing Act, it might probably be found advisable to introduce a short amending Act to extend the operation of those provisions to the Protectorates of a friendly foreign Power.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the provisions of "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870," were applicable as between the dominions of Her Majesty and the Protectorates of a friendly foreign Power, and, if not, whether further legislation should be introduced with the view of making the provisions of that Act so applicable.

That your Lordship would be glad to be favoured, at the same time, with any general observations which we might have to offer on the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to Expedition to Damaraland within § 11 of Act.

That, in our opinion, the expedition which was supposed to be preparing within the limits of Cape Colony to proceed to the Damara region would have been within the provisions of the 11th section of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

Damaraland a friendly State, though a Protectorate.

No necessity for further legislation.

The Damara region, although a Protectorate of the German Government, is not part of the dominions of that State within the meaning of the section, but it is a friendly foreign State within the meaning of section 11 taken together with section 30 of the Act, and we see no necessity for any further legislation on the subject.

Order in Council for Africa and Madagascar.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 30th April last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin* relative to a draft Order in Council for Africa, including the Island of Madagascar.†

Draft of for approval.

That with reference to our opinion of the 5th August, 1887, upon the draft of the proposed Africa Order, 1887, which was submitted for our consideration on the 25th July, 1887, Sir Thomas Sanderson was to state that further consideration of the subject led to the conclusion that it would be preferable to deal with the questions treated in the proposed Order by means of a new Order repealing the West Africa Order of 1885 and the Madagascar Order of 1869, and applying to all parts of Africa, including Madagascar, which were subject to Her Majesty's foreign jurisdiction, and were not covered by other Orders in Council under the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts.

That the draft Order in Council had been prepared by Mr. R. S. Wright for that purpose, and that Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether it might, in its then form, be approved; and that we would at the same time be good enough to add any general observations or suggestions which might occur to us in connection with the matter.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 19th August last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter which had been received from the Home Office,* inclosing copy of a letter addressed to Mr. Secretary Matthews by a M. H. Kozel, himself a subject of the Netherlands, with reference to the national status of his son and daughter, who were born within the walls of the British Embassy at Vienna, while M. Kozel was in the service of the late Sir Andrew Buchanan, at that time Her Majesty's Ambassador at the Court of Austria.

That M. Kozel lived with the late Sir Andrew Buchanan for many years, and served him continuously as house steward at the Hague, at Berlin, at St. Petersburgh, and at Vienna.

That at St. Petersburgh he married an Englishwoman, who was also in Sir Andrew's service, and that there were two children of the marriage, both born, as already stated, at the British Embassy, Vienna.

That upon Sir Andrew Buchanan's retirement from the Diplomatic Service in 1879 Kozel accompanied him to England, where he has, with his children, ever since resided.

That M. Kozel was now desirous of being informed whether his children, by virtue of their birth within the walls of a British Embassy, under the circumstances mentioned, were natural-born British subjects; and that Sir T. Slave Trade Treaty with Belgium.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, May 20, 1889.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 6th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying draft of a Treaty with His Majesty the King of the Belgians for the suppression of the African Slave Trade.

Draft of, for approval.

That the draft Treaty was, as would be seen from the marginal notes, with certain modifications, framed upon the lines of the Treaty with Turkey of 1880, and that of 1841 between this country, Austria, Prussia, and Russia.

That it would be seen that Article II omitted all reference to the proviso of Article II of the Treaty of 1841 that cruizers exercising the right of search should be furnished with warrants and commanded by officers of a certain rank.

That it was thought that, in the altered conditions under which both the Slave Trade itself, and any naval operations connected with its suppression, were now carried on, there was no fear of abuses arising from the omission of such a proviso.

That all allusion to the search of vessels under the convoy of a ship of war was also omitted, as it was improbable that the case provided for in Article VII of the Treaty of 1841 would arise.

That no special stipulations had been made as to the proceedings at the port where captured vessels were delivered over to the local authorities, beyond securing, in Articles IV and VI, that the proceedings should take place before the competent Tribunal.

With the view of more effectually dealing with the modern custom of transporting slaves in native craft, modifications had been made in the enumeration of those articles and other signs which, when found on a suspected vessel, were to be considered as primâ facie evidence of her illicit character. That those were contained in Article V.

That Sir T. V. Lister was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the proposed Treaty was one that might properly be concluded, together with any general observations which we might have to offer upon it.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to Costs of prosecutor in cases tried before a Consular Court in Egypt.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, February , 1889.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, with reference to the incidence of the taxed costs and expenses of the prosecution in criminal cases tried before the British Consular Court in Egypt.

That the question arose for determination under the following circumstances:—

Case of Mr. Clere.

Sir C. Cookson, Her Majesty's Consul and Judge at Alexandria, had applied to your Lordship to sanction the charge of 59*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.*, being (1) the amount of the taxed costs (33*l.* 5*s.*) of Mr. Clere, prosecutor in the recent case of Regina v. Colborne in Her Majesty's Consular Court at Alexandria, which resulted in the conviction of the accused for perjury on the 9th March last, Mr. Clere having been put under recognizance to attend and give evidence at the trial; and (2) the travelling expenses (26*l.* 7*s.* 3*d.*) of the witnesses in the case.

That Sir C. Cookson stated that the taxed costs and expenses above mentioned were allowed by him under the authority of 7 Geo. IV, cap. 64, sec. 23, which authorized the Court to pay expenses of prosecutor and witnesses of prosecution, together with compensation for trouble and loss of time on trial by indictment for certain misdemeanours, amongst which was perjury, of which the prisoner was convicted.

View of Sir C. Cookson.

That Sir C. Cookson contended that he had no power to refuse those costs, on the ground that the Act 7 Geo. IV, cap. 64, was part of the law applicable to the British Consular Court in Egypt, by virtue of sections 5 and 6 of the Levant Order in Council of the 12th December, 1873, which provided that Her Majesty's criminal jurisdiction exercisable in the Ottoman dominions for the repression or punishment of crimes and offences, or for the maintenance of order, should, as far as circumstances admitted, be exercised on the principles of and in conformity with the common law, the statute law, and other law for the time being in force in and for England, and with the powers vested in and according to the course of procedure and practice observed by and before Courts of Justice in England.

Does Act 7 Geo. IV, cap. 64, apply to case?

That the Treasury had, however, raised the question whether part of Mr. Clere's taxed costs could properly become a charge on public funds, and that your Lordship would therefore be glad to be favoured with our opinion as to whether the circumstances of the case were such as admitted of the provisions of 7 Geo. IV, cap. 64, sec. 23, being applied thereto.

That if that question were answered in the affirmative it was presumed, having regard to the wording of section 6 of the Order in Council, that Sir C. Cookson had no alternative but to apply the provisions of the Act above mentioned.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the question submitted therein, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and in obedience to your Lordship's commands have the honour to

Report—

Act not applicable to a Consular Court.

That in our opinion, the circumstances of this case are not such as to admit of the provisions of 7 Geo. IV, cap. 64, sec. 23, being applied thereto, inasmuch as the following sections of the Act prescribe the mode in which such expenses shall be allowed and paid, and are altogether inapplicable to a Consular Court and proceedings taking place before it.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, April 24, 1889.

Privileged Debt of 1876. Right of Egyptian Government to pay off at par.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquis of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list,* with reference to the question (which has lately been much agitated in financial circles, and has now become of very pressing and immediate importance to Her Majesty's Government) whether the Egyptian Government are justified, having regard to their relations with the holders of the bonds of the Privileged Debt of 1876, and to all the circumstances of the case, in paying off those bonds at par if empowered so to do by a Decree issued with the assent of the Great Powers of Europe, who recognized this Privileged Debt, and were parties to the Egyptian Law of Liquidation promulgated on the 17th July, 1880.

The facts of the case are as follows:—

Issue of stock in 1876.

In 1876 the Egyptian Government issued 17,000,000*l.* of Privileged bonds or Preference stock. This issue was made in virtue of a Khedivial Decree of the 18th November, 1876, and the service of the stock was guaranteed by the revenues of the Egyptian railways and the revenues of the Port of Alexandria, and by a first charge on the other revenues assigned to the service of the Public Debt of Egypt.

Conditions and securities of issue.

In order to render the guarantee more secure, the Egyptian Government consented to hand over the Administration of the Railways and of the Port of Alexandria to an International Commission consisting of English, French, and Egyptian officials, and they further agreed that the Administration thus formed should remain in action until all the Preference Debt had been either redeemed by the operation of the sinking fund, or had been repaid.

Stipulation as to repayment.

It was, however, expressly stipulated that the Administration of the Port of Alexandria should be freed from the guarantee and detached from the International Administration so soon as 2,000,000*l.* of the Preference Debt had been either redeemed or repaid, and that the Railways should in like manner be freed by the redemption or repayment of a further 15,000,000*l.*

Scheme for sale of railways in 1876.

It should be mentioned that, at the time of the negotiations which culminated in the Decree of the 18th November, 1876, a scheme was under consideration and examination for the sale of the Egyptian railway system to an English Company, and the terms of the Decree were therefore carefully chosen with a view to reserve full power to the Egyptian Government to liberate the Railways from the control of the bondholders by repayment of the bonds guaranteed on the railway revenue. This scheme was not eventually carried out, but it is submitted that the fact of its existence, contemporaneously with the negotiations above referred to, as well as the fact that several similar schemes have been brought forward during the last ten years, goes far to show that it was recognized and intended that the Egyptian Government should be at liberty to take back the railways at any time on repayment of that portion of the Preference Debt which was secured on them.

Portions of Decree bearing on case.

The portions of the Decree, of which it will be observed that certain Articles are printed on the face of the Preference bond (marked A in pencil) herewith, bearing particularly on the present question, are annexed below:—

"Art. 3. Il est établi une Administration spéciale des Chemins de Fer et du Port d'Alexandrie, qui sera placée sous la direction d'une Commission, comme il sera indiqué ci-après.

"Ces obligations seront offertes par préférence aux porteurs des Emprunts 1862, 1868, et 1873, en échange des obligations de ces emprunts, qui rapportent 7 °/o, lesquelles obligations seront annulées.

"L'annuité nécessaire au service des obligations Privilégiées 5 °/o, s'élevant à huit cent quatre-vingt-cinq mille sept cent quarante-quatre livres sterling, et payables en deux semestrialités de quatre cent quarante-deux mille huit cent soixante-douze livres sterling, chacune formera la première charge sur les revenus des Chemins de Fer et du Port d'Alexandrie et restera, en tout cas, la première obligation de la Commission de la Dette Publique.

"Art. 27. L'Administration, formée ainsi qu'il est dit ci-dessus, restera en fonctions jusqu'à ce que toutes les obligations Privilégiées spécialement créées aient été amorties et remboursées. Le Port d'Alexandrie étant compris dans cette garantie pour une somme de deux millions de livres sterling pourra être libéré de la garantie et détaché de l'Administration commune lorsque deux millions de livres de ces titres Privilégiées auront été amortis ou remboursés.

"Les Chemins de Fer étant compris dans cette garantie pour quinze millions de livres sterling en titres Privilégiés pourront être libérés par l'amortissement ou le remboursement de quinze millions de ces titres."

Liquidation of 1880, and increase of debt.

The financial measures of arrangement with the creditors of Egypt not proving sufficient, that country was compelled in 1880 to have resort to liquidation, and on the 17th July of that year a Law of Liquidation was enacted, with the consent of the Great Powers, recognizing the Privileged Debt, which increased that debt by a further issue of 5,743,800*l.*, the bonds being in identically the same terms (dates of issue excepted) as those of 1876.

The total of the Privileged Debt thus became 22,743,800*l.* nominal, and now (a portion having been already redeemed by the operation of the sinking fund) amounts to somewhat over 22,000,000*l.*

Further liquidation in 1885.

The operation of the sinking fund has, however, since 1885, been practically suppressed, for in July of that year the Egyptian Government was again compelled to resort to liquidation, and a Khedivial Decree was issued with the assent of the European Powers suspending the operation of the sinking fund, which can only be again put into force by further legislative action in Egypt, taken with the sanction of those Powers.

Proposed repayment of Preference Debt.

The credit of Egypt has greatly improved of late, and the Egyptian Government now desire to repay the Preference Debt, and to free the railways and the Port of Alexandria from the hypothecation to the bondholders in accordance, as that Government maintains, with the provisions of Article 27 of the Khedivial Decree of 1876.

It has been suggested, for instance, that the Privileged bonds, which have been recently above par and now stand at par or thereabouts, should be paid off, and a loan in substitution raised by an issue of new bonds bearing interest at, say, 4 per cent.; or, in so far as the holders assent, the change might be carried out as a simple conversion, a clause as to reduced interest being stamped upon the bonds.

Repayment at par. Contention of bondholders;

It is, however, contended on behalf of the bondholders that Article 27 of the Decree of 1876, although it grants a right of repayment to the Egyptian Government, does not allow the exercise of this right except with the previous consent of the bondholders, or, in other words, that the Egyptian Government has not the right to repay the bonds at par, but only the right to repurchase them from the bondholders at whatever price the latter choose to demand.

and of Egyptian Government.

The Egyptian Government, on the other hand, submit that the reference to sixty-five years merely indicates the term within which the Egyptian Government must repay the whole of the principal of the debt, and that the right of repayment conferred by Article 27 is a distinct alternative to the scheme of redemption by means of a sinking fund, and that the terms of the Article can only contemplate repayment at par, the word "repay" clearly indicating restitution to the creditors of the exact amount originally lent, or assumed to have been lent, on the face of the bonds by the bondholder to the borrowing Government.

Arguments in favour of Egyptian view.

This argument appears to be fortified by reference to the official text of the Decree, which is in the French language. Here the meaning of the word "rembourser" (properly translated in the English text by "repay" or "pay off") is even more clearly opposed to the idea of repurchase, which would be properly rendered in French by the word "racheter," "remboursement" meaning, as is submitted, repayment of the capital at par, and "rachat" being the proper word to denote repurchase by arrangement with the bondholders on such terms as they might be willing to accept.

It is worthy of observation, as supporting this view, that, in the official text of the Khedivial Decree of the 18th November, 1876, by which the Egyptian Unified Debt of 59,000,000*l.*, as well as the Privileged Debt, was established, the word "rachat" is actually employed, with reference to the Unified as distinguished from the Privileged bonds, in the sense indicated in the preceding paragraph of this letter. (See Article 6 of that Decree endorsed on the Unified bond sent herewith, and marked B in pencil.)

Moreover, had it been intended that repayment (or "remboursement"), as distinguished from redemption by the operation of the sinking fund ("amortisation"), should only be permitted after further separate agreement with the bondholders, it would have been clearly unnecessary to mention a repayment of this nature in the contract at all, since it is at any time open to a creditor and debtor to settle existing debts by mutual arrangement; and by mutual arrangement alone could the Egyptian Government secure the acceptance of any such scheme by their individual creditors.

It seems further inconceivable that, at a time when negotiations were actually in progress for the purchase of the Egyptian railways by an English Company, the framers of the Decree should have used language which could permit any uncertainty to exist as to the price at which the charges on the railways could be paid off, and thus afford a small number of Preference bondholders an opportunity of resisting by extortionate demands a scheme in which all parties were interested, and which would have been, if carried out, to the great advantage of the general body of Preference holders.

It is true that there is no such express provision in the Law of Liquidation of 1880 as exists in Article 27 of the Decree of 1876 for the Railways or the Port of Alexandria being detached from the guarantee by the repayment of the capital respectively represented by these securities; there is, however, no stipulation in a reverse sense in the Law of 1880, and the fact that this subsequent Law is altogether silent on the point may, as is submitted, be taken as a confirmation of the clause already existing in the previous Decree.

To contend that the sole power of paying off this Preference Debt now possessed by the Egyptian Government is that provided by the scheme of redemption under which the whole of the bonds were to be repaid by periodical drawings spread over a term of sixty-five years (see the Table of Amortization printed on the bonds) is to treat as mere surplusage the words "ou remboursés" which follow the word "amortis" in the original French text of Article 27.

It is submitted on the contrary that in the expression "amortis ou remboursés" the word "ou" is to be read disjunctively, and that a distinct alternative to the operation of the sinking fund is thereby provided in the form of the right of repayment of the bonds at par.

The amortization by means of the sinking fund has, as already stated, ceased to be in operation for the last three years, having been suspended and practically abolished by the Khedivial Decree of the 27th July, 1885, with the approval of the Great Powers.

If, therefore, the inability of the Egyptian Government to pay off the Privileged Debt at par be insisted upon, the effect will apparently be to render that debt practically irredeemable, and thus to make it a continuous burden upon the revenues of Egypt, a result which, considering the scope and object of all the several liquidations, and other arrangements of the finances of Egypt, which have from time to time been made with the approval of the Great Powers, cannot, it is clear, have been for a moment contemplated either by their Representatives or by those of the Egyptian Government.

Conditions of action of Egyptian and British Governments.

As the whole arrangements with regard to the Privileged Debt of Egypt are subject to the approval of the Great European Powers, it may be assumed that the Egyptian Government will not take any steps in this matter until the assent of those Powers has been obtained; while in so far as the individual action of Her Majesty's Government is concerned their assent to any probable arrangement would be greatly dependent upon the abstract legal right of the Egyptian Government under their existing engagements with the bondholders to pay off the loan at par.

Matter governed by Egyptian law.

On the legal question thus raised it is submitted that the relations between the bondholders and the Government of Egypt are not governed by English law but by the law of Egypt—the State which contracted the loan—and that the power to pay off at par is a question of Egyptian law, governed primarily and in so far as they are expressly in point by the provisions of the Egyptian Civil Code, and in other respects subject generally to the recognized principles of jurisprudence regulating the discharge of obligations.

1889

Egyptian law.

With reference to the Egyptian law upon the matter, I am to refer you more particularly to Articles 155, 199, and 201 of the Egyptian Civil Code, and to section 3 of the Egyptian Code of Procedure 773.

Various opinions of experts in Egyptian law are also submitted herewith, and will be found in the printed pamphlet entitled "Documents relatifs à la Conversion de la Dette Privilégiée. Avril 1889. Le Caire: Imprimerie Nationale." It will be seen that the "Contentieux du Ministère des Finances," the "Comité du Contentieux de l'État," and the three independent jurists of eminence who have been consulted are unanimous in interpreting the obligations of the Egyptian Government to the bondholders as permitting a scheme of repayment of the kind now proposed.

Opinion of counsel of bondholders.

I am also to inclose, for your information, a letter dated the 13th April, which has been received from Messrs. Harries, Wilkinson, and Raikes, a firm of solicitors acting on behalf of a large number of the bondholders.

It will be seen that Messrs. Harries and Co. adopt on behalf of the bondholders whom they represent the view that Article 27 of the Khedivial Decree of 1876 implies no power on behalf of the Egyptian Government to pay off the bonds at par against the will of the bondholders, or to compel them to receive payment of the principal moneys secured by the bonds otherwise than by half-yearly drawings spread over the term of sixty-five years according to the indorsed Table of Amortization; and that they inclose in support of this contention opinions which have been obtained from Sir Charles Russell, Q.C., M.P., Sir Horace Davey, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Finlay, Q.C., M.P., and other counsel practising at the English Bar.

As, however, the exact facts which were put before these eminent counsel, and upon which they formed the opinions quoted, were not stated, Messrs. Harries and Co. were asked to be good enough to supply Her Majesty's Government with copies of the case or cases laid before their counsel. This they have now done, and a copy of their "case for opinion" is also sent herewith.

Opinion of Khedive's Financial Adviser.

I am also to inclose, for your consideration, a Memorandum with which the Financial Adviser to His Highness the Khedive has favoured Her Majesty's Government, containing his observations and criticisms upon these opinions. (See Sir E. Vincent's Memorandum of the 18th April, 1889.)

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion—

Questions submitted.

1. As to whether, having regard to the terms of the Khedivial Decree of November 1876, and to the tenour of the bonds themselves, the Egyptian Government is justified in paying off the bonds of the Privileged Debt at par if empowered to do so by a Decree to which the Great European Powers who recognized that debt subscribe their assent; and in the event of your answer to the above question being in the affirmative—

2. Whether, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, Her Majesty's Government may, as one of those Powers, properly assent to such a Decree.

I have, &c.

Case governed by Egyptian law.

1. That the right of the Egyptian Government to pay off the bonds constituting the Preference Debt is, in our opinion, to be determined with reference to the law of Egypt.

Bonds may be paid off under a Decree and with assent of Powers.

Having regard to the terms of the Khedivial Decree, and the tenour of the bonds themselves, we are of opinion that the Egyptian Government may, if empowered to do so by a Decree to which the Powers assent, pay off the bonds at par.

May assent to such a Decree.

2. We are of opinion that, in view of all the circumstances of the case, Her Majesty's Government may properly assent to such a Decree.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received May 14.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, May 13, 1889.

British Protectorate on the Somali Coast.

Proposed Order in Council as to jurisdiction.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of an Order in Council which had been prepared with a view of providing for the exercise of civil and criminal jurisdiction by Her Majesty within the limits of the British Protectorate which had lately been established on the Somali Coast.

That other papers bearing on the subject, and explanatory of its details, were also annexed for our convenience.

That the grounds on which it had been deemed advisable to prepare the Order in Council in question would be gathered from the following statement:—

Extent and establishment of Protectorate.

That the British Protectorate as now established extended practically over the whole of that portion of the East African Coast, generally styled the Somali Coast, which lay between Cape Jibouti, on the southern side of the entrance to the Bay of Tajourra, and Bunder Ziadeh, situated approximately on the 53rd parallel of east longitude (Greenwich), and that the circumstances which led to its establishment were briefly as follows:—

That in 1884 it was decided to withdraw the Egyptian authorities and troops from Harrar, and from the whole of the coast which they had hitherto occupied from the Straits of Bab-el-Mandeb to Ras Halfoun, including the ports of Tajourra, Zeyla, and Berbera.

That Her Majesty's Government had consequently to consider what course to adopt in order to anticipate the contingency of local disturbances or of foreign occupation, some of the ports, and especially Berbera, being of importance to Aden as a market whence food supplies were drawn.

That with regard to the coast eastward of Zeyla it was determined to make such arrangements as might be thought desirable for the preservation of order, and the security of British interests, and to conclude Agreements with the local Sheikhs.

That that resulted eventually in the establishment of a British Protectorate in the regions described.

That copies of the Treaties with the tribes were inclosed.

That Her Majesty's Government, at the same time, offered upon certain conditions, which would be found in the despatch to Lord Dufferin No. 178 of the 29th May, 1884, to recognize the Sultan's authority over Tajourra and Zeyla.

Negotiations.

That no reply having been received from the Porte, the Turkish Government were warned that unless immediate steps were taken for the occupation of Zeyla, it would be necessary for Her Majesty's Government to send a force there so as to preserve order, and that that was what practically happened.

That at Tajourra the French stepped in, and the coast between Ras Ali and Ghubbet Karab was placed under French protection.

That in 1887 a Declaration was drawn up for the delimitation of the respective spheres of influence of Great Britain and France on the Somali Coast.

That that Declaration was annexed.

Notification of Protectorate.

That in July 1887 Her Majesty's Government notified to the Powers which took part in the Congo Conference at Berlin in 1886 the establishment and limits of the British Protectorate.

That a similar notification was made to the Porte, with certain explanations and assurances, which would be found in the accompanying despatch to Sir W. White.

That in answer to inquiries made by the French Embassy in October 1887 respecting a newly-imposed duty, the French Chargé d'Affaires was informed that Zeyla was under the protection of Great Britain and the administration of British officials.

That in February 1888 a fresh Agreement was concluded with the French Government, whereby the boundary of the French Protectorate was moved somewhat nearer to Zeyla.

1889

That in January 1888 the Turkish Ambassador made a formal proposal that the Governor of the Yemen should take over the occupation of Zeyla, and garrison it with Turkish troops.

That that proposal was declined for the reasons stated in the accompanying despatch to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople.

That under those circumstances the inclosed draft Order in Council, under the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts, had been drawn up to provide for the exercise of civil and criminal jurisdiction within the limits of the British Protectorate.

Position of Zeyla.

That some doubt had been felt as to whether Zeyla, having regard to the fact that it might not unreasonably be held to have been formerly a possession of the Porte, and to the other peculiarities of its position already narrated, ought to be excluded from the operation of the Order in Council, in which case, as was presumed, it would still, as a portion of the Sultan's dominions, fall under the operation of the Levant Orders.

That that arrangement, however, would be a very inconvenient one, and, under all the circumstances of the case, had not been judged necessary or advisable.

That no reference had been made in the draft Order in Council to the slight modification of boundary made in favour of France by the Agreement of February 1888; and that it was held that that matter might probably be dealt with under clause 3 by the issue of instructions by the Secretary of State to the British authorities on the coast.

That Sir T. V. Lister was to request that we would take the draft Order in Council, with the explanatory papers annexed, into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether it might properly be laid before Her Majesty in Council for approval in its present form; or, if not, to suggest any alterations or modifications in its terms which might, in our opinion, advantageously be made.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and in obedience to your Lordship's commands have the honour to

Report—

Approve proposed Order in Council.

That, in our opinion, the draft Order in Council may properly be laid before Her Majesty for approval in its present form.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received July 10.)

[After reciting the terms of reference which follow, they report as on page 25:—]

---

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, June 8, 1889.

Right of Egypt to conclude non-political Treaties.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquis of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the question of the extent of the right granted to Egypt by the Sultan of the Ottoman Empire to conclude independently, and without his intervention, Conventions of a non-political character with foreign Powers.

Firmans respecting Egypt.

I inclose a printed collection of the Firmans respecting Egypt issued between 1841 and 1879, and, in so doing, I am, in the first place, particularly to call your attention to the Firman addressed by the Sultan to the Khedive of Egypt on the 8th June, 1867 (p. 28 of Print), which runs as follows:—

"Be it known, on the arrival of this my Imperial Firman, that, as is also mentioned in my Firman granting the privilege of hereditary succession to the Viceroyalty ('Kidiviet') of Egypt, those fundamental laws which are in force in other parts of my dominions shall be maintained and respected by Egypt. Now, by fundamental laws are meant all those principles laid down in the Imperial Rescript of Gulhaneh (1839). But inasmuch as the internal administration of the province, and consequently its financial, material, and other interests are confided to the Government of Egypt in order to preserve and extend those interests, it is permitted to that Government to frame such Regulations as may seem necessary in the form of 'special Tanzimat for the interior.' In like manner, whilst all the Treaties of the Sublime Porte must be respected in Egypt, an exception is made only as regards the customs duties and as regards foreigners in matters relating to the police, postal, and transit services, for which full powers are given to them to enter into special arrangements with foreign Agents. But such arrangements must not take the form of Treaties or Conventions having any political signification or purport. And in the event of their being inconsistent with the principles laid down above, or opposed to my original sovereign rights, it will be necessary to hold them as null and void.

"Wherefore, the question of conformity or non-conformity to these principles in matters where a doubt exists as regards Egypt must be referred to the Sublime Porte previously to such arrangements being concluded.

"And when in the manner explained above any special arrangements are entered into concerning the customs duties in Egypt, information thereof must be transmitted to my Sublime Porte.

"Also, when any Conference respecting Commercial Treaties takes place between my Government and other Powers, in order that the commercial interests of Egypt may be attended to, the opinions of the Egyptian Administration shall be consulted thereon."

On the 8th June, 1873, the Sultan granted to Ismaïl Pasha a new Firman (p. 32), purporting to supersede previous Firmans by uniting them all in one instrument; and I am also to bring to your special attention the following language employed by His Majesty on this occasion (see pp. 34-35 of Print):—

"J'attache la plus grande importance à la prospérité de l'Égypte, au bien-être, à la tranquillité, et à la sécurité de sa population, et comme ce sont des objets qui reposent sur l'administration civile et financière du pays, ainsi que sur le développement des intérêts matériels et autres du pays qui sont du ressort du Gouvernement Égyptien, nous mentionnons comme suit, en les modifiant et les élucidant, tous les privilèges que mon Firman Impérial, soit anciennement, soit à nouveau, a accordés au Gouvernement Égyptien pour qu'ils soient possédés à toujours par les Khédives qui se succéderont.

"L'administration civile et financière du pays et tous les intérêts matériels et autres, sous tous les rapports, sont du ressort du Gouvernement Égyptien et lui sont confiés, et comme l'administration, le bon ordre de tout pays, le développement de la richesse et de la prospérité de la population proviennent de l'harmonie à établir entre les faits, les relations générales, la condition et la nature du pays, ainsi que le caractère et les mœurs des habitants, le Khédive d'Égypte est autorisé à faire les règlements intérieurs et des Lois toutes les fois qu'il sera nécessaire.

"Il est aussi autorisé à renouveler et à contracter, sans porter atteinte aux Traités politiques de ma Sublime Porte des Conventions avec les Agents des Puissances Étrangères pour les Douanes et le commerce et pour toutes les relations qui concernent les étrangers, et toutes les affaires intérieures et autres du pays, et cela dans le but de développer le commerce et l'industrie et de régler la police des étrangers ainsi que leur situation et tous leurs rapports avec le Gouvernement et la population."

* * * * * *

"C'est en conformité de ma volonté Impériale que les règles et principes contenus dans ce Firman doivent être observés à toujours et à jamais exécutés, en lieu et place de tous les autres contenus dans mes précédents Firmans (p. 36)."

On the occasion of the deposition of Ismaïl Pasha in 1879, the Sultan, in appointing Tewfik Pasha to succeed his father as Khedive of Egypt, attempted proprio

motu to revoke all the existing Firmans, but eventually a Firman (bearing date the 2nd August, 1879) was issued, which stated (p. 38):—

"Tous les impôts de cette province seront perçus en mon nom. Les habitants d'Égypte étant de mes sujets, et ne devant comme tels subir la moindre oppression ni acte arbitraire, à cette condition le Khédiviat d'Égypte, auquel est confiée l'administration civile, financière, et judiciaire du pays, aura la faculté d'élaborer et d'établir, d'une manière conforme à la justice, tous Règlements et Lois intérieurs nécessaires à cet égard."

And, with regard to the conclusion of non-political Conventions, said (p. 38):—

"Le Khédive sera autorisé à contracter et à renouveler, sans porter atteinte aux Traités Politiques de mon Gouvernement Impérial, ni à ses droits souverains sur ce pays, les Conventions avec les Agents des Puissances Étrangères pour les Douanes et le commerce, et pour toutes les transactions avec les étrangers concernant les affaires intérieures, et cela dans le but de développer le commerce, l'industrie, et l'agriculture, et de régler la police des étrangers et tous leurs rapports avec le Gouvernement et la population. Ces Conventions seront communiquées à ma Sublime Porte avant leur promulgation par le Khédive."

In notes exchanged between the Porte and the British and French Ambassadors (29th July and the 2nd and 3rd August, pp. 39, 40, and 41), it was declared in the name of the Porte that the stipulation in the last Firman: "Ces Conventions seront communiquées à ma Sublime Porte avant leur promulgation par le Khédive," . . . . . "exclut toute obligation de la part du Khédive d'obtenir la sanction ou l'autorisation du Sultan pour promulguer ou mettre en pratique les dites Conventions." The Turkish Declaration went on to say: "Toutefois, la Sublime Porte se réservant le droit de refuser de reconnaître ou de sanctionner les dites Conventions, et devant toujours être à temps pour le faire si elles portaient atteinte aux Traités Politiques de la Sublime Porte ou à ses droits souverains sur ces pays, comme il est dit dans le texte même du Firman."

The Porte further declared "que le présent Firman ne restreint en rien, sauf ce qui y est expressément relaté, les droits, privilèges, et prérogatives précédemment et personnellement accordés aux Khédives d'Égypte:" this Declaration being made in order to obviate any obscurity as to the meaning of the following paragraph in the Firman, viz. (p. 39)—

"Le Khédiviat ne saura sans aucun motif ni prétexte abandonner à d'autres, en tout ou en partie, les privilèges accordés à l'Égypte, et qui lui sont confiés comme une émanation des prérogatives inhérentes au Pouvoir Souverain, ni aucune partie du territoire."

View taken by Her Majesty's Government.

The view which has hitherto been taken by Her Majesty's Government as resulting from these various Firmans has been:—

1. That the Treaties between Turkey and foreign States are binding on Egypt even in commercial matters if such Treaties are of a date antecedent to the Firman of 1873, which conceded to Egypt the right to make non-political Conventions with foreign Powers; but that Egypt can, by entering into Conventions with the foreign Powers having such Treaties with Turkey, free herself from the obligations thus devolving upon her.

2. That Egypt is not affected by the commercial stipulations in Treaties concluded by Turkey subsequently to the Firman of 1873, and that she can enter into Commercial Conventions with foreign Powers and promulgate and act upon them without its being necessary for her to obtain the sanction of the Porte, provided that such Conventions do not deal with political questions, and that they be communicated to the Porte before promulgation.

View taken by the Porte.

There is reason, however, to believe that the Porte takes a different view of the matter, and it appears possible that the Sultan may claim that the words "ni à ses droits souverains sur ce pays" which occur in the Firman of 1879 not only amount to a reservation disentitling Egypt to claim that such Conventions as the Khedive may enter into with foreign Powers are good against the Porte, but justify the Porte in including Egypt in the commercial arrangements which Turkey may make by Treaty with foreign Powers. The passage in which those words are used is as follows:—

"Le Khédive sera autorisé à contracter et à renouveler, sans porter atteinte aux Traités Politiques de mon Gouvernement Imperial, ni à ses droits souverains sur ce pays, les Conventions avec les Agents des Puissances Étrangères, &c., &c."

The Commercial Treaty between England and Turkey expired in 1883, having been denounced by the Porte, and any Treaties of a like nature existing between Turkey and the other foreign States have, with one exception, been abrogated or will expire in little more than a year from the present time, the exception being the Treaty with Portugal, which will not terminate till the year 1896.

Her Majesty's Government have carried on negotiations for a Commercial Treaty with Turkey for some time past, but without much prospect of bringing them to a satisfactory conclusion, and the position which they now occupy is that of being entitled to the most-favoured-nation treatment, which they claim under the Capitulations with the Porte of 1675. Her Majesty's Government have, however, been in negotiation with the Government of Egypt for the conclusion of a Commercial Convention, and the Turkish Minister for Foreign Affairs has made a verbal communication to the Dragomans of most of the Embassies at Constantinople, to the effect that the Porte has heard that Her Majesty's Government is negotiating with the Khedive a Special Commercial Convention, but that as all foreign Governments happen to be at the same time in negotiation with Turkey for new Commercial Treaties, the Porte wishes to draw the attention of these Governments to the unadvisability of continuing the negotiations with Egypt so long as the Treaties with the Suzerain Power have not been brought to a conclusion.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the views, above indicated, upon the construction of the Firmans, can be maintained in their integrity; and, if not, to what extent, and in what respects, they can, on a fair construction of these documents, be successfully combatted.

I have, &c.

Carmelo Debono sentenced for coining.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Villiers Lister's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin* of his letter respecting the case of Carmelo Debono, who, on the 4th April last, was sentenced in Her Majesty's Consular Court at Alexandria to five years' penal servitude for counterfeiting coin, and whose wife is now praying for a mitigation of his sentence.

Petition for mitigation of sentence.

That his wife's petition was, by your Lordship's directions, referred to Sir Charles Cookson who had tried the case, and it would be seen, from the reply which had been received from that gentleman (No. 28 of the 24th ultimo), that, in view of various facts which had since the trial come to his knowledge, he was of opinion "that there are grounds in this case for the exercise of Her Majesty's prerogative of pardon, or at any rate for a remission of part of the unexpired sentence."

That Sir V. Lister was to request us to take the accompanying papers into our consideration, and to inform your Lordship what action we would recommend should be taken by your Lordship in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to Prisoner should be pardoned.

That, in our opinion, Her Majesty's prerogative of pardon should be exercised in this case. Apart from the finding of the portmanteau and its contents, there was no evidence sufficient to support the conviction, and it now appears clear from Sir Charles Cookson's Report that the prisoner's statement about the portmanteau was true.

Pillage of the "Belem," wrecked off the coast of Labrador.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list with reference to the alleged pillage by British fishermen of the French brig "Belem," which was wrecked off the coast of Labrador in July 1887.

That the history of the case would be found fully set out in the accompanying précis, which had been prepared in the Foreign Office, but that a print of the actual correspondence which had passed upon the subject between the various Departments and Governments concerned was also annexed, in case we should desire to refer more particularly thereto.

That it would be seen that great discrepancies existed between the facts of the case as furnished to Her Majesty's Government by the French authorities (M. Jusserand of the 16th April, 1888) and those adduced in evidence (1) before the Court of Inquiry instituted by the District Magistrate at Harbour Grace, and (2) before the British Naval Court which subsequently held an exhaustive investigation into the matter.

That the Secretary of State for the Colonies, after a full consideration of the case, had been unable to find any ground upon which the Government of Newfoundland could properly be held liable to compensate the sufferers.

But that, before deciding what answer should be returned to the French Government in the event of their pressing the claim for compensation put forward on behalf of the master of the "Belem," your Lordship would be glad to be also favoured with our opinion on that point.

That copies of two Memoranda by Sir Edward Hertslet, dated respectively the 8th February, 1877, and 14th April, 1888, were also inclosed.

That the first of those Memoranda dealt generally with various cases of outrages on foreigners in British dominions and on British subjects abroad, while the second dealt particularly with the case of the British vessel "Prince of Wales," which was wrecked on the coast of Brazil in 1861.

That on pp. 3 and 4 of the general Memorandum of the 8th February, 1877, would be found a short account of the case of the Austrian vessel "Sollicito Bocchese," which was wrecked off the coast of Galway in February 1850, and plundered by the inhabitants of Baffin Island.

Question as to liability of the Newfoundland Government.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was therefore to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would be good enough to furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to whether, having regard to all the circumstances attendant upon the wreck of the "Belem," the Government of Newfoundland could properly be called upon to compensate the sufferers thereby, and, if so, upon what grounds.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to add that your Lordship would be glad to be furnished, at the same time, with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

No reason to admit French claim.

That, in our opinion, there is no evidence that the pillage complained of was caused by the neglect or default of persons in judicial or executive employment, while there is evidence that it was mainly caused by the improper conduct of the captain; and that there is therefore no reason to admit the claim for compensation made by the French Government.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury,—(Received June 26.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, June 25, 1889.

Tunisian Decree conferring power on French Tribunals to decide private suits brought against the Tunisian Administration.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the inclosed copy of a Decree (and other accompanying papers) which was published, by order of His Highness the Bey of Tunis, on the 27th November, 1888, and which purported to confer on the French Tribunals established within the Regency, power to hear and decide all suits brought by private individuals against the Administration.

Effect of Decree.

That the effect of the Decree in question, in so fas as it was binding upon the subjects of foreign Powers, appeared to be to compel any such foreigners who might have sustained injuries at the hands of the Beylical Government, to personally present their claims before the French Tribunals under restrictions and conditions of a more or less onerous description, and to deprive them of the right, which they had hitherto been admitted to possess under the Capitulations, of having such claims presented and pressed by their own Governments respectively through diplomatic channels.

That in so far as the claims and interests of British subjects were concerned, Her Majesty's Government had agreed, since the establishment of the French Protectorate, that the French Resident should be the channel through which any representations, which they might deem it necessary to make, should reach the Bey, but that they had in nowise surrendered, on behalf of the subjects of Her Majesty, the privileges which they derived from the Capitulations, and which in no way formed part of the ex-territorial jurisdiction in civil and criminal matters formerly possessed by Her Majesty's Government in Tunis, but subsequently transferred by international agreement to the exclusive jurisdiction of the French Tribunals upon the establishment by the French Republic of a Protectorate, or Regency, over Tunis.

Doubt as to its being binding on foreign Powers.

That as, therefore, the provisions of the Decree in question seemed to be entirely unconnected with the arrangement under which British Consular jurisdiction over British subjects was transferred to the French Tribunals, it appeared to Her Majesty's Government, when the measure was first brought to their attention, that it was open to grave doubt whether it could be held obligatory upon foreign Powers without their previous assent.

Advantages of Decree.

But that, at the same time, Her Majesty's Government were alive to the advantages which might arise from a system whereby the claims of British subjects against the Tunisian Government might be referred to the French Tribunals, if it could be secured that the procedure were substantially the same as that followed in France with respect to suits against the Government of the Republic, and that the right to appeal were also preserved to the fullest extent allowable in other cases.

That it was consequently thought advisable, in the first instance, to procure the opinion of M. Clunet, the well-known French jurist, upon those points, and that an exhaustive Report had now been obtained from that gentleman, in which he went fully into those questions.*

Opinion of M. Clunet.

That it would be seen that M. Clunet considered that the Tunisian Decree was more favourable to a claimant than the French law; but that, at the same time, he acknowledged that the latter was iniquitous; and that, under those circumstances, it scarcely seemed advisable to surrender our diplomatic remedy for a judicial one, which, in its present shape, might prove insufficient or illusory.

As to advisability of objecting to Decree.

That Sir Philip Currie was specially to call our attention to the various objections urged against the Decree in Consul Ricketts' despatch No. 27 of the 1st December, 1889; and also in the note of the Italian Chargé d'Affaires of the 7th January, 1889; and that he was to inquire whether, in, our opinion, it might not be advisable for Her Majesty's Government to demur to the measure, until, at any rate, its terms were enlarged so as to confer upon foreign claimants a right of appeal to the highest appellate Tribunals as full as that provided in the case of suits of a similar nature, if brought by one private individual against another, and until the other objectionable features to which attention had been called were removed or modified.

That Sir Philip Currie was accordingly to request that, after taking the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted therein: and that should we consider the provisions of the Decree objectionable, your Lordship would further be glad to be favoured with our views as to the nature of the modifications and amendments which it might be advisable that Her Majesty's Government should urge upon the attention of the Government of the French Republic.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

No ground for objecting to Decree.

Right to protect diplomatically unaffected.

That, in our opinion, there is no ground for objecting to the Decree of the 28th November, 1888. The only effect of such Decree is to give to persons who have claims against the Administration the means of enforcing those claims by suits before the French Tribunals—a provision which is of advantage to foreigners as well as to the subjects of the Bey. The right of the British Government, as it existed immediately before the making of the Decree, to protect its subjects by diplomatic action against wrong-doing on the part of the Tunisian Government is of course unaffected by any such Decree.

No. 15.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received July 15.)

Royal Courts of Justice, July 11, 1889.

My Lord,

Alleged violation of domiciles of British subjects in Tunis without consent of British Consul.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. H. Sanderson's letter of the 18th May last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list with reference to two cases recently brought to the attention of your Lordship by Her Majesty's Consul at Tunis, in which it was alleged that the domiciles of British subjects, named respectively Licari and Ellul, had been illegally violated.

That the facts of both cases were very similar, and that, as the considerations of law arising in either case appeared to be practically identical, it had been thought well to endeavour to present the cases together in the summary which followed, viz.:—

Case of Mr. G. Licari. Seizure of liquor.

That on the 16th December, 1888, the premises of Mr. G. Licari, a British subject, proprietor of a liquor manufactory at Tunis, were entered by the Tunisian police, under the orders of an Inspector of the Sanitary Board, appointed by the Municipal Council, and that some 2,000 bottles of liquor and other articles were seized and placed under seal. That that step was taken in consequence of samples of his goods, which had previously been taken by an Inspector, having been declared unfit for consumption on being subjected to analysis by French experts.

That in reporting that case to the Foreign Office, Mr. Ricketts stated that the Tunisian authorities based their proceedings on the Municipal Decree of the 15th July, 1888, regulating the sale of liquors, and on the XVIIth Article of the Treaty of 1875, by which it was provided that "manufactories (of British subjects) and their appurtenances, being immovable property, shall be subject to the provisions of the Convention of the 10th October, 1863, relative to the permission granted to British subjects to hold real property in the Regency of Tunis."

Seizure not authorized by French Courts.

That Mr. Ricketts further suggested that, although that line of argument might perhaps have been admitted, had the act complained of proceeded in the first instance under an order of the French Tribunals, Mr. Licari's premises had, in fact, been entered under no higher authority than that of an agent appointed by the Municipal Council, and without the previous knowledge and sanction of Her Majesty's Consul-General. (Mr. Ricketts No. 32 of the 24th December, 1888.)

That in the following January, Mr. Ricketts reported (No. 9 of the 25th January, 1889) that the Bey had, on the 3rd of that month, issued a Decree establishing a Sanitary Commission, with the French Consul as President.

That in reply to his inquiries with regard to the Commission, Mr. Ricketts was informed (to Mr. Ricketts No. 22 of the 22nd February, 1889) that Her Majesty's Government had no objection to the transfer to that body of the functions hitherto exercised by the Municipality relative to sanitary business.

That as regarded, however, the enforcement of any sanitary Regulations, Her Majesty's Government held that the French Tribunals had alone power to execute process on foreigners, and that, therefore, the dwelling of a British subject could not be forcibly entered by order of the Sanitary Commission alone.

* See Earl of Lytton's No. 122, March 7, 1889.

That Mr. Ricketts was subsequently instructed to act in conformity with those views, but to make no protest unless a violation of a British domicile should take place, by its being entered without his consent by Tunisian officials acting without any further authority than the orders of the Sanitary Commission.

That meanwhile, on the 4th February, Mr. Ricketts had been informed (No. 15 of the 4th February, 1889), in reply to his despatch No. 32 respecting the Licari case, that the French Tribunals were entitled to issue process to be executed on foreigners and their residences in all matters which came within the civil or criminal jurisdiction of those Tribunals, but that the matter in question, not having been brought before them, was a case of process issued by the native Municipality alone, and in violation of immunities secured to British subjects by Treaty.

That he was, therefore, instructed to make a representation to that effect to the French Resident.

Condemnation of Mr. Licari by French Courts.

That in March Mr. Ricketts reported (No. 21 of the 19th March and No. 22 of the 22nd March) that the case had been submitted by the Municipality to the French Courts, and that Mr. Licari had been condemned by them to fine, imprisonment, and forfeiture of his goods.

That copies of the Judgment against Guiseppe and Emmanuelle Licari, and also of that against Francesco and Baldessare Licari, were forwarded to the Foreign Office by Mr. Ricketts in his despatches No. 30 of the 11th April and No. 34 of the 22nd April, 1889, which were transmitted to us.

That on the 25th March Mr. Ricketts made the representation to the French Resident which he had been instructed to make respecting that case by the Foreign Office despatch No. 15 of the 4th February, 1889 (Mr. Ricketts' telegram of the 3rd April, 1889).

Seizure of goods of Mr. A. Ellul without judicial process.

That in April Mr. Ricketts reported (No. 31 of the 15th April, 1889) that the premises of Mr. A. Ellul, a butter merchant, had been entered by the police under the orders of Delegates from the Municipality for the enforcement of sanitary measures, without any judicial process having been instituted against Mr. Ellul, and without the previous consent of Her Majesty's Consul-General having been obtained.

That in the note which Mr. Ricketts addressed to the French Resident protesting against those proceedings, he seemed to have based his remonstrances on the fact, that samples of Mr. Ellul's goods had been taken away contrary to his wish, and that such a proceeding on the part of the Tunisian authorities amounted to a violation of the XXIIIrd Article of the Treaty of 1875, which stipulated that no British subject "shall be compelled to sell anything to a Tunisian against his free will."

That a Memorandum, which was in the nature of a reply to the representation made by Mr. Ricketts on the 25th March, was communicated to the Foreign Office on the 6th May by the French Chargé d'Affaires.

French reply on cases.

That the Memorandum reviewed the Licari and Ellul cases from the French point of view, and maintained that the action of the Municipal officers was authorized by French law, and did not require the previous sanction of the British Consul.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the action of the Tunisian authorities in either or both of the cases in question constituted a violation, and, if so, in what respects, of the existing Treaty rights of British subjects, and that he was to add that your Lordship would be glad, at the same time, to be favoured with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We were also honoured with a Memorandum from Sir Philip Currie, dated the 30th May, covering two further despatches from Her Majesty's Consul at Tunis on the same subject.*

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Proceedings not in violation of Treaty rights.

That we gather from the papers before us that the acts of the Tunisian authorities, which form the subject of complaint, were performed by the "police judiciaire" authorized by the French Tribunals to act in execution of the Tunisian laws, and the French Code of Criminal Procedure, and that the officers were responsible to the French Tribunals, which have adjudicated upon the whole matter, and before which no question appears to have been raised as to the irregularity of the proceedings.

---

* Consul Ricketts, No. 41, May 20; ditto, No. 43, May 22, 1889.

Under these circumstances, the acts complained of do not, in our opinion, constitute a violation of the Treaty rights of British subjects.

Under the Conventions of 1863 and 1875, there is no provision which would exempt the dwellings of British subjects from liability to the process prescribed by the Municipal law.* If the Protocol of July 1868 is to be regarded as in force in Tunis the case would no doubt be different, but, having regard to the dates and language of the Conventions of 1863 and 1875, we doubt whether reliance can safely be placed upon that Protocol so far as this case is concerned.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received July 19.)

Royal Courts of Justice, July 19, 1889.

My Lord,

Cases of the "Virginie" and "Amazone."

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, together with other papers noted in the accompanying list, the inclosed draft of a note which it was proposed to address to the French Ambassador at the Court of St. James', in reply to a representation which was received on the 14th September last by Her Majesty's Government from that of the French Republic with regard to the cases of two French fishing-schooners, named respectively "La Virginie" and "L'Amazone."

Condemned for violation of Newfoundland Bait Acts.

That those vessels were, on the 9th July of last year, boarded within the territorial waters of Newfoundland by the Customs Commissioners of that Colony, and were by them conveyed to the port of Placentia, where their respective masters were charged before the Resident Magistrate with a violation of the Colonial Bait Acts.

That, after a careful investigation, a fine of 200 dollars was inflicted in each case, and, as an additional penalty, each vessel was confiscated.

Appeals against Judgments.

That against those Judgments both vessels appealed, and, pending the hearing of the appeals, were, on the 22nd August, 1888, handed over to their respective owners on their complying with such conditions as to bail and otherwise as to the Court seemed just.

That the appeal was heard before Mr. Justice Little in August last at the sitting of the Supreme Court for Newfoundland on circuit.

Results of appeals.

That Judgment was then reserved, but had since been delivered, setting aside the decision of the Stipendiary Magistrate in so far as the forfeiture of the vessels was concerned, but affirming it in other respects.

That an official copy of that Judgment, under the signature of the Judge and the seal of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland, had now been procured, and had been reproduced in the inclosed print, which it was proposed, should we see no objection, to forward to the French Government, with the note of which the draft was sent with the papers.

No further appeals.

That Sir Philip Currie was, with respect to the finality of that Judgment, to call our attention to the opinion of the Attorney-General of Newfoundland of the 19th March last (Inclosure 3 in Colonial Office letter of the 13th April), from which it would be seen that neither party had entered an appeal, nor applied for a rehearing of the cases, and that the time for so doing had long since expired.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the course proposed was one which was suitable, and whether the terms of the draft note were such as were right and proper, having regard to the circumstances of the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Approve proposed course, and draft note as amended.

That, in our opinion, the course proposed is suitable, and that the terms of the draft despatch are right and proper, subject to the following amendment of the final sentence.

After "detail," begin a fresh sentence thus:—

"Her Majesty's Government is now informed that the time for appealing against this decision has elapsed, and that no appeal has been lodged, and I have the honour to say that the conclusion," &c.

Draft of Letter from the Marquis of Salisbury to M. Waddington.

M. l'Ambassadeur, Foreign Office, , 1889.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's note of the 15th instant again calling attention to the case of the two French schooners "La Virginie" and "L'Amazone," and requesting that the decision of Her Majesty's Government in the matter might now be communicated to you.

I must express my regret for the delay which has taken place, and which has been caused by the necessity of procuring documents from Newfoundland material for a thorough examination of the question.

These have been received, and Her Majesty's Government have not failed to give their best consideration to the representation made by M. Jusserand on the 14th September last.

The two vessels in question were boarded by Newfoundland Commissioners within the territorial waters of that Colony on the 9th July, 1888, and were taken to Placentia, where the masters were brought before the Resident Magistrate and charged with a violation of the Bait Act. After a careful investigation, a fine of 200 dollars was inflicted in each case, and the master was sentenced to the additional penalty of having his vessel confiscated.

In calling attention to the circumstances in question, M. Jusserand, among other objections to the course pursued by the Newfoundland authorities, contended that whether or not the facts complained of took place within the 3-mile limit, the Colonial officers were not warranted in boarding the French schooners, since the latter were not found in the actual violation of the law, in default of which such an act of search, and, à fortiori, of seizure, was illegal, and therefore could not be admitted by the French Government.

M. Jusserand further alleged that the vessel making the seizure had no military character, and added that he was instructed to bring these points under the special notice of Her Majesty's Government pending the issue of the appeal to a higher Court, which had been made by the persons directly concerned.

Her Majesty's Government have now been furnished with a copy of the Judgment in the matter which has been delivered by the Newfoundland Court of Appeal, and I have the honour to transmit it herewith to your Excellency, for the information of your Government.

It deals so fully with all the particulars of the case, and with the objections raised by the French Government, that it seems unnecessary for me to recapitulate the facts and arguments in detail. Her Majesty's Government are now informed that the time for appealing against this decision has elapsed, and that no appeal has been lodged, and I have the honour to say that the conclusion arrived at, by which the Court set aside the Judgment appealed from in so far as it related to the forfeiture of the vessels, but affirmed it in other respects, appears to Her Majesty's Government to be well founded.

I have, &c.

My Lord,

New French Nationality Law.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 30th August last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us despatches from Her Majesty's Embassy at Paris, as marked in the margin,* on the subject of a Law respecting nationality recently passed in France.

That the text of the Law would be found in Mr. Egerton's despatch No. 34, Treaty, of the 20th June, and the points of importance to which Her Majesty's Ambassador called attention in his Excellency's despatch No. 10, Treaty, of the 29th March last.

That, in connection with the subject, Sir Thomas Sanderson was to call our attention to Article XI of the Commercial Convention between Great Britain and France of the 28th February, 1882.

Proposed instructions

as to protest or observation.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was further to inclose drafts of instructions which your Lordship proposed to address to Her Majesty's Ambassador and Consuls in France, and that he was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether they were right and proper under the circumstances of the case, or whether we were of opinion that there was anything in the new French Law which called for protest or observation on the part of Her Majesty's Government before instructions were issued in conformity with its provisions.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was also to request that we would, if necessary, favour your Lordship with any general observations which might occur to us on the subject.

We were also honoured with a note from Sir Thomas Sanderson, dated the 7th September last, inclosing a despatch† from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris containing further details respecting the new Law.

Draft of Despatch to the Earl of Lytton.

(No. . Treaty.)

My Lord, Foreign Office, November , 1889.

WITH reference to your Excellency's despatch No. 10, Treaty, of the 29th March last, and to subsequent correspondence on the subject of the new French Law of Nationality, I now transmit to you a draft of an instruction which I propose to address to Her Majesty's Consuls in France explaining the effect of this measure, and prescribing rules for their guidance in the matter.

I have to request that, in accordance with the invitation contained in M. Spuller's note of the 19th July, inclosed in your despatch No. 45, Treaty, of the 20th, your Excellency will communicate a copy of this draft instruction officially to the French Government, and request to be informed whether they concur in its terms and are prepared to instruct the French authorities accordingly.

Status of sons of British fathers not born in British dominions or in France.

You will point out that Her Majesty's Government have assumed that the French Law is not intended to impose the status of French citizens on British subjects born in France, whose fathers were born, not in Her Majesty's dominions, but in some country other than France; and that a statement appears in the Circular to Her Majesty's Consuls to the effect that M. Spuller's assurance includes this class of persons; but no doubt should be allowed to exist whether such is the intention of the French Government.

Instructions as to—

Passports.

In regard to the request contained in your Excellency's despatch No. 10, Treaty, of the 29th March last, for instructions as to passports, I have to inform you that you are authorized to grant passports to all persons who are British subjects according to British law, under the heretofore existing conditions; and to afford them, in case of necessity, such protection as you properly can, except in regard to military service in the case of those who, by the new Law, are called upon to serve.

Military service.

Marriages.

As regards the question whether a person who is a British subject according to British law, and at the same time a French citizen according to the new French Law, can marry a British subject either at the British Embassy or at a British Consulate without having gone through a previous ceremony according to the law of France, I have to state that such a marriage at Embassy or Consulate would be valid by British law, but that it would appear to be very desirable that the parties should comply with the French law before having their marriage solemnized at the British Embassy or Consulate, especially if they intend to reside in France.

Levy of light dues on shipping in British ports.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 28th July last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list respecting the bearing of the national treatment and most-favoured-nation clauses in Treaties between this country and foreign States on the system under which light dues were at present levied on shipping in the ports of the United Kingdom.

That we should perceive from the inclosed correspondence that the question was raised by an inquiry addressed to the Secretary of State by Mr. White, the Chargé d'Affaires of the United States' Legation in this country, and to which no reply had been returned.

That it was well, however, to bear in mind, in connection with the matter, that the United States' Government had recently been engaged in a controversy with foreign Governments as to their right to levy tonnage dues, &c., differing in amount according to the geographical situation of the places from which the voyage was made, and that their attitude in that controversy was set forth in the inclosed extract from the "National Republican" (see Sir L. West's No. 85, Commercial, of the 24th March, 1886).

That Mr. White's inquiry was, in the first place, referred to the Board of Trade, and that their reply of the 9th July set forth the precise manner in which light dues were levied on shipping in the ports of the United Kingdom.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was next to direct our attention to a note by Sir Edward Hertslet on that letter, in which it was pointed out that, although the United States could, under Article II of the Treaty of the 3rd July, 1815, claim national treatment for their vessels, there was no clause in that or any other Treaty with the United States which would entitle them to claim for their vessels in this country the treatment of the most favoured nation.

Is geographical discrimination a breach of m.-f.-n. clauses?

That with regard, however, to the wider question of principle, Sir Julian Pauncefote was to inclose a proof copy of a paper which was then in preparation for Parliament, and which showed in a convenient form for reference the various most-favoured-nation Articles in existing Treaties between this country and foreign States; and that he was to request us to be good enough to favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the system under which light dues were now levied in the United Kingdom, as set forth in the Board of Trade letter, could be regarded as an infraction of any of those most-favoured-nation clauses.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Present system not a breach of any m.-f.-n. clauses

That, in our opinion, the existing system of light dues in the United Kingdom, whereby the due payable is made to vary according to the length and nature of the voyage on which the vessel is engaged, cannot fairly be regarded as a breach of any of the most-favoured-nation clauses.

No distinctions with reference to nationality.

It is, in the first place, to be observed that the distinction has no reference to nationality. Whatever be the flag of the vessel, whether she be British or foreign, the charges are exactly the same.

Objections to not allowing differential charges.

The result may be that vessels trading from the ports of some of the countries have to pay higher dues than those trading from the ports of others. But it would be a very serious thing to concede that it was not open to any country to make such a difference of charge—assuming, of course, that all vessels, whatever their flag, are charged alike, and that the scale of charges is framed in good faith, and with reference to the value of the undertaking to the benefit received in respect of which the dues are charged—because it will be found that, in many of the schedules of dock and harbour rates authorized by Parliament, similar differential charges are made, varying in amount according to the length and nature of the voyage and the ports from which the vessels have traded.

Royal Courts of Justice, May 31, 1889.

My Lord,

Draft Bill to validate marriages irregularly solemnized under the Consular Marriage Acts of 1849 and 1858.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of a Bill which it was proposed to introduce into Parliament this Session to validate certain marriages which had been irregularly solemnized under the Consular Marriages Acts of 1849 and 1858.

That it would be seen from the Memorandum which accompanied the Bill that its object was to validate certain marriages under those Acts, the validity of which had been questioned on the ground either of some defect in the authority of the officer by or before whom they were solemnized, or by reason of their not having been solemnized at the Consulate itself.

That it would also be seen from the accompanying printed Memorandum* by Sir Edward Hertslet, that questions had also been raised as to the validity of certain other marriages of British subjects abroad, solemnized either at Her Majesty's Embassies or Legations, or by missionaries in uncivilized countries; or, in Russia, by persons in holy orders of the Church of England.

That your Lordship was, however, of opinion that any attempt to deal with all those various marriages in the present Bill might probably raise difficult questions as to the validity of marriages solemnized by Nonconformist ministers, as it would be hardly possible to validate such marriages in the past without validating them also in the future; and that, as it had become necessary to introduce into Parliament at as early a date as possible (although it would not be possible to do so during the present Session) another Bill to amend the present Acts under which British subjects could now be married abroad, your Lordship proposed to confine the present Bill to validating marriages under the Consular Marriages Acts of 1849 and 1858.

That your Lordship was also of opinion that it would be better to deal with such irregular marriages generally than to enumerate in a Schedule or Schedules to the Bill each particular irregular Consular marriage, so far as it was known in the Foreign Office, as cases might have occurred in which similar irregularities had been committed, but had not been reported to the Secretary of State.

That Sir T. V. Lister was to request that we would take the draft Bill, together with the accompanying papers, into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether it might properly be introduced into Parliament in its then shape.

That your Lordship would be glad, at the same time, to be favoured with any general suggestions or observations which we might desire to offer upon the matter.

* Confidential No. 5473.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to

Report—

Approve draft Bill.

That, in our opinion, the Bill, with the amendments noted in the draft, may properly be submitted to Parliament.

We have, &c.

CONSULAR MARRIAGES CONFIRMATION.

Memorandum.

The object of this Bill is to validate certain marriages under the Consular Marriage Acts, the validity of which has been questioned, on the ground of some defect in the authority of the officer by or before whom they were solemnized, or by reason of their not having been solemnized at the Consulate itself.

Questions have also been raised as to the validity of certain other marriages of British subjects abroad, solemnized either at Embassies or by missionaries in uncivilized countries; but any attempt to deal with these marriages would raise difficult questions as to the validity of marriages solemnized by Nonconformist ministers. It would hardly be possible to validate such marriages in the past without validating them also in the future. A certain class of missionary marriages celebrated in Basutoland and British Bechuanaland is being dealt with by a separate Bill to be introduced at the instance of the Colonial Office.

The object of subsection (2) of clause 1 is to place persons naturalized between 1850 and 1870 in the same position as persons naturalized under "The Naturalization Act, 1870" (33 & 34 Vict., c. 14).

Draft of a Bill to remove Doubts as to the Validity of certain Marriages under the Consular Marriage Acts.

A.D. 1889.

Whereas doubts have been entertained as to the validity of certain marriages purporting to have been solemnized in foreign countries or places in accordance with "The Consular Marriages Act, 1849," and "The Consular Marriage Act, 1868," and it is expedient to remove those doubts:

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

Confirmation of certain marriages under Consular Marriage Acts.
12 & 13 Vict., c. 68.
31 & 32 Vict., c. 61.

1.—(1.) Every marriage (both or one of the parties thereto being subjects or a subject of this realm) which, before the passing of this Act, has purported to have been solemnized in any foreign country or place in accordance with "The Consular Marriages Act, 1849," as amended by "The Consular Marriages Act, 1868," and has been registered in accordance with those Acts, shall, notwithstanding any defect in the authority of the Consul or other officer by whom or in whose presence the marriage was solemnized, and notwithstanding that the marriage was not solemnized at the Consulate, be as valid as if it had been solemnized with a due observance of all forms required by those Acts.

(2.) For the purposes of this section an alien who has been naturalized shall be deemed to be a British subject, except when he is within the limits of the foreign State of which he was a subject before being naturalized, and of which he has not ceased to be a subject, in pursuance of the Laws thereof, or of a Treaty to that effect.

"Naturalization Act, 1870," § 7.

(3.) Provided that this Act shall not render valid any marriage which, before the passing of this Act, has been declared invalid by any Court of competent jurisdiction, or affect any right dependent on the validity or invalidity of such marriage, or render valid any marriage either of the parties to which has, during the life of the other, lawfully intermarried with any other person.

1889

Short title.

3.—(1.) This Act may be cited as "The Consular Marriages Confirmation Act, 1889."

(2.) The Acts whereof the titles are given in the Schedule to this Act may be cited by the respective short titles given in that Schedule.

(Inclosed in Colonial Office letter to Foreign Office of August 30, 1889.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, August 13, 1889.

Proclamation of annexation and of Protectorate.

Submitting draft Forms.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Wingfield's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us draft Forms of Proclamation of Annexation and of Protectorate, drawn up in the Foreign Office, which it was proposed should be used by the officers of Her Majesty's Navy when declaring an Annexation or a Protectorate.

That Mr. Wingfield was to inclose a printed Memorandum* on the subject also prepared in the Foreign Office; and that he was to request that we would inform your Lordship whether, in our opinion, the proposed Forms were suitable and sufficient for the purpose.

That it would be observed that the Forms had been drawn up so as to be applicable only in the case of an island or islands, but that it was presumed that in the case of Annexation or the establishment of a Protectorate on the mainland, the substitution of the word "territory" or "territories" would meet the requirements of the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Approving Forms as altered.

That, in our opinion, the proposed Forms, as initialled by us, are suitable and sufficient.

Their application to territory other than island.

In the case of territory other than island, the word "territory" or "territories" followed by sufficient particulars of identification can be substituted.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received August 23.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, August 21, 1889.

New Canadian Extradition Act.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the inclosed letter from the Colonial Office relative to a new Extradition Act which had been passed by the Dominion of Canada, and to which Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies proposed to advise Her Majesty to give her assent.

That the questions which appeared to be raised in that Act were set forth in the accompanying Memorandum, to which were annexed the various documents of reference alluded to therein.

Should H. M. assent to?

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether Her Majesty might properly be advised not to disallow the Canadian Act, and with any general observations on the subject which we might wish to make.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Nothing to lead H. M. to withhold assent.

That, in our opinion, there is nothing in the proposed Canadian Act which should lead Her Majesty to withhold her assent. There is, however, one matter arising on section 5 of the Act to which we think it right to direct attention.

Diplomatic arrangement between Canada and foreign country might lead to difficulties.

That section appears to contemplate diplomatic arrangements between a foreign country and Canada, to which arrangements Her Majesty's Government would not be directly parties. It occurs to us as being possible that such arrangements might involve this country in difficulties in the event of the foreign country declining to fulfil any undertaking given, not to Her Majesty's Government, but to Canada. This question, however, is one more of policy than of law, but we feel it right to call your Lordship's attention to the point.

We have, &c.

No. 21.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received September 10.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, September 7, 1889.

International Metrical Convention.

Position of Great Britain.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Fergusson's letter of the 31st July last, in which he stated that by your Lordship's direction he transmitted to us the papers noted in the accompanying list with reference to the position of Great Britain in regard to the International Metrical Convention of 1875.

Objects of.

That Convention, which had for its chief object the creation of an International Office of Weights and Measures, was signed at Paris on the 25th May, 1875, by the Representatives of a large number of foreign States (among which, however, Great Britain was not included), and an International Committee for the execution of its provisions was formed under the presidency of General Ibañez, one of the Spanish Plenipotentiaries.

That ratifications were exchanged at Versailles by most of the Signatory Powers on the 20th December following.

Adhesion of Her Majesty's Government.

That the adhesion of Her Majesty's Government to that Convention (subject to certain conditions and reservations) was officially announced by Her Majesty's Minister at Paris to the President of the International Committee on the 17th September, 1884, and the Lords of the Treasury agreed to pay an entrance fee of 1,787*l.* from the Civil Contingencies Fund on the occasion of Her Majesty's Government joining the Convention of States represented by that Committee.

Withdrawal of Her Majesty's Government from Committee for executing.

That on the 26th February, 1887, the Treasury announced to the Foreign Office the intention of Her Majesty's Government to withdraw from the Committee, and Her Majesty's Ambassador in Paris addressed a note to the Committee accordingly. That Lord Lyons, in sending home a copy of that communication in his despatch No. 85, Commercial, of the 14th March, 1887, inquired whether he should also write a note to the Committee referring to Article XIII of the Convention, and denouncing the Convention in the specific terms of that Article.

Denunciation of Article XIII.

That the Article in question is as follows:—

"XIII. A l'expiration d'un terme de douze années, la présente Convention pourra être dénoncée par l'une et l'autre des Hautes Parties Contractantes.

"Le Gouvernement qui userait de la faculté d'en faire cesser les effets en ce qui le concerne sera tenu de notifier son intention une année d'avance . . . ."

That shortly after Lord Lyons had made the above inquiry, his Excellency received a letter from General Ibañez, also calling attention to the provisions of Article XIII (see Lord Lyons' despatch No. 110, Commercial, of the 28th March, 1887). That Lord Lyons was informed in reply, by despatch No. 39, Commercial, of the 16th April, 1887, from the Foreign Office, that the accession of Her Majesty's Government had been made in an informal way, that the Act was not communicated to any of the Governments already parties to the Convention, but only to a private person in his capacity of President of the Committee, and that Her Majesty's Government had not exchanged ratifications of that Convention with any foreign Government. That his Excellency was at the same time instructed to inquire whether a year's notice would be accepted forthwith, inasmuch as Great Britain might be held to be a party to the Convention, and almost immediately afterwards, at the request of the Treasury and Board of Trade, conveyed in the latter's letter of the 6th April, 1887, he was requested to endeavour to obtain acceptance of the withdrawal without notice.

That the International Committee replied to his Excellency, as will be seen by referring to Lord Lyons' despatch No. 158, Commercial, of the 6th May, 1887, that it was not for them to accept the British notice of withdrawal, but for the Governments of the Contracting States, to whom they would submit the question in case Her Majesty's Government persisted in its intention to withdraw, although in the opinion of the International Office every Power joining the Convention was bound at least for twelve years from the date of its accession. But the Foreign Office suggested to the Treasury, under date of the 9th May, 1887, that Her Majesty's Government should abide by the view that, subsequently to the lapse of the term of twelve years from the date of signature of the Convention, twelve months' notice could be given by Great Britain as prescribed by Article XIII.

That, in reply, the Treasury pointed out, in a letter of the 16th May, 1887, that Her Majesty's Government paid the large sum of 1,787*l.* on entrance in 1884 as for subscriptions from the inauguration of the Committee in 1875, and consequently were placed in the same position as regarded the term during which they must remain members of the Committee as the original Signatory Powers.

That the views of Her Majesty's Government, as expressed in that correspondence with the Treasury, were conveyed to General Ibañez, who, however, as reported by Lord Lyons in his despatch No. 198, Commercial, of the 10th June, 1887, contested the assertion that the sum paid on entrance was the equivalent of back subscriptions since 1875, and also contended that, that argument being erroneous, the conclusion fell to the ground.

That the statement of General Ibañez regarding the entrance money was neither disputed nor admitted by the Treasury.

That their Lordships had (see their letter of the 6th August, 1887) in the meantime been induced by the representations of the Royal Society and the Astronomer Royal to review their decision to withdraw, and General Ibañez was accordingly so informed (see despatch to Mr. Egerton No. 117, Commercial, of the 10th August, 1887, and his reply No. 301, Commercial, of the 11th August, 1887).

That, subsequently, in order to meet a deficiency caused by the arrears of certain defaulting States, application was made to the other States parties to the Convention to pay an extraordinary contribution, and on the 1st November, 1888, as reported by Mr. Egerton in his despatch No. 375, Commercial, of the 7th November, 1888,

General Ibañez made a further appeal to Her Majesty's Government, who, it was asserted, had alone refused to give her share of the deficiency.

That to his request the Treasury, as reported by the Board of Trade in their letters of the 1st February, 1889, and the 27th April, 1889, were unwilling to accede without receiving a formal acknowledgment of the liberty of Her Majesty's Government to withdraw from the International Committee of Weights and Measures, though they had no present intention of so doing.

That, accordingly, Lord Lytton gave notice to that effect to General Ibañez, as reported in his despatch No. 107, Commercial, of the 4th May, 1889.

That the General, in acknowledging his Excellency's communication in a note, copy of which was inclosed in Mr. Egerton's despatch No. 129, Commercial, of the 27th May, 1889, maintained the contention of the International Committee, that Her Majesty's Government were not entitled to withdraw from the Convention until the expiration of twelve years from the date of their accession, observing that the payment made by Her Majesty's Government on joining did not represent back subscriptions, but merely a share in the cost of construction of the Bureau, and arguing in effect that Her Majesty's Government would, by premature withdrawal, become a debtor for the advantages derived from their temporary adhesion, and that that view had apparently been acquiesced in by Her Majesty's Government by their reconsideration of their decision to withdraw.

That General Ibañez further suggested that Her Majesty's Government should bring their views before the General Conference of Contracting States in September next, and should postpone action in the matter until the meeting.

That, in those circumstances, your Lordship was desirous of being advised as to whether, in our view, the position of Great Britain upon her accession to the Convention did or did not become precisely analogous, for purposes of withdrawal therefrom, to that of the original Signatory Powers, and, if not, in what respects and for what reasons any distinction could properly be made between those Powers and this country in regard to the terms of withdrawal.

That Sir J. Fergusson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted herewith into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted in that letter, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to

Report—

Position of Great Britain as to withdrawal from Convention. Effect of Article XIII.

That, in our opinion, the position of Great Britain upon her accession to the Convention became precisely analogous, in respect of the power of withdrawal therefrom, to that of the original Signatory Powers. The clear effect of Article XIII is that after the 1st January, 1888, any Power a party to the Convention, whether as one of the original Contracting Powers or as having acceded to it under Article XI, is entitled upon one year's notice to denounce the Convention.

We have, &c.

Law Officers of the Crown to Lord Knutsford.

(Transmitted by the Colonial Office to the Foreign Office in their letter of December 14, 1889.)

Royal Courts of Justice, November 28, 1889.

My Lord,

Canadian Extradition Act, 1889.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bramston's letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to invite our attention to the accompanying print of correspondence respecting the Extradition Act recently passed in Canada. That that correspondence had already been before us upon the general question whether the Act should be approved by Her Majesty, but that there was a further question upon which your Lordship desired our advice.

Section 5 contemplates diplomatic arrangements.

That the Dominion Parliament, under "The British North America Act, 1867," had, in the opinion of the Minister of Justice, the right to legislate upon the matter by virtue of the power given to it (see section 91) to make Laws for the peace, order, and good government of Canada; and that your Lordship understood that, after giving full consideration to the points raised by Sir Henry Bergne in his Memorandum of the 13th July, we did not think it necessary to question that opinion; but that, as we observed in our Report to the Foreign Office of the 21st August last, section 5 of the Extradition Act in question appeared to contemplate diplomatic arrangements between a foreign country and Canada, to which arrangements Her Majesty's Government would not be directly parties.

Is it within the powers of the Canadian Government?

That the particular instance was not of serious importance, but that the section appeared to be in principle an encroachment upon the Treaty-making power of the Imperial Government; and that your Lordship would be obliged if we would favour you with our opinion whether the 5th section was strictly within the powers of legislation conferred upon the Dominion Parliament by "The British North America Act, 1867," and with any general observations which might occur to us on the subject.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

No objection to section 5.

That, in our opinion, there is no objection to the 5th section of this Extradition Act, as being in excess of the powers conferred upon the Dominion Parliament by section 91 of the Act of 1867.

GERMANY.

No. 22.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received May 30.)

Royal Courts of Justice, May 28, 1889.

My Lord,

Claim of Mr. T. F. Funnell for compensation for his imprisonment by the German authorities, and for the seizure of his vessel the "Lady Godiva."

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir James Fergusson's letter of the 8th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to a claim for compensation which had been put forward on behalf of Mr. Thomas Francis Funnell, the registered owner and master of the trawl fishing-smack "Lady Godiva," and which it was desired that Her Majesty's Government should press upon the Imperial German Government.

That the circumstances under which the claim arose were set forth at length in the statement of the case which had been prepared at the instance of the Grimsby Smack-owners Association, and that various documents in support of the allegations contained in the case were also inclosed.

That it was represented that Mr. Funnell was entitled to compensation at the hands of the German Government for the actual losses incurred by him through the action of the German gun-boat "Falke," and also in respect of the pain and suffering undergone by him during an alleged wrongful imprisonment extending over nine weeks and five days.

That it would be observed that a number of questions were appended to the statement of the case, but that it was not thought necessary to ask us to favour your Lordship with specific answers to those various queries, except in so far as we might think it desirable to do so.

That should we, however, be of opinion that Mr. Funnell was entitled to compensation, your Lordship would be glad if we would indicate the respects in which, and the grounds on which, a claim in that behalf might properly be pressed upon the attention of the German Government.

That Sir James Fergusson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted therein, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We were also honoured with a Memorandum from Sir James Fergusson, dated the 13th ultimo, covering some further papers relative to the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and in obedience to your Lordship's commands have the honour to

Report—

Mr. Funnell's claim should be strongly pressed.

That, in our opinion, this is a case in which the claim for compensation should be strongly pressed upon the German Government.

We think Mr. Funnell is entitled to compensation for the illegal seizure of his vessel and gear, and the imprisonment to which he was himself subjected. The fact that a prosecution, properly instituted and conducted, does not result in a conviction is not in itself a ground for a diplomatic claim for compensation. But, in this case, the German officers seems to have acted, to a certain extent, upon the view that the "Lady Godiva" had no right to be within German territorial waters.

Further, at the time they adopted the very serious course of firing upon the vessel, they had no substantial evidence that she had actually fished, or been preparing to fish, in German waters.

Nature of the compensation to be demanded.

The compensation claimed should be:—

1. The damage done to the ship, sails, and rigging;
2. The value of the gear seized, less the amount obtained for it when it was sold;
3. The costs incurred by Funnell in and about these proceedings over and above the sum paid to him under order of the Court; and
4. A sum of money in compensation for the nine weeks of imprisonment to which he was subjected before trial.

We have, &c.
(Signed) RICHARD E. WEBSTER.

GREECE.

No. 23.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received July 17.)

Royal Courts of Justice, July 15, 1889.

My Lord,

Claim of Mr. M. Spartali, a British subject, on account of guns, &c., supplied to Greek Government.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by your Lordship's direction, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which related to a claim of Mr. Michael Spartali, a British subject, formerly Greek Consul-General in this country, upon the Greek Government.

That the claim arose in connection with the supply of ships' guns and munitions of war to Greece in 1867, at the time of the insurrection in Crete.

That a Memorandum giving the history of the case would be found in Inclosure (A) of Mr. Spartali's letter of the 28th January, 1888. That it was, however, unnecessary for the present purpose to enter into details, as, in principle, the matter had been recently settled by the presentation of a Bill to the Greek Chambers providing a sum of 10,810*l.* for the liquidation of Mr. Spartali's claim (Sir E. Monson, No. 261, 6th December, 1888).

That a Report from the Greek Minister of Finance on introducing the Bill would be found in the same despatch. That it also gave a history of the case, and that it would be seen that Mr. Spartali had throughout received the support of Her Majesty's Government.

Payment of claim sanctioned by Greek Chamber.

That the greatest difficulty was experienced by the Greek Government in passing the Bill through the Chamber, but that it was eventually carried on the 23rd January last, and Her Majesty's Minister at Athens was authorized to receive the money on Mr. Spartali's behalf, if the Greek Government preferred that course.

Attachment of the money.

That before, however, anything could be done, an alleged creditor of Mr. Spartali attached the money (Sir E. Monson, No. 19, 31st January, 1889).

That the circumstances of the attachment were explained in a Memorandum inclosed in Sir E. Monson's despatch No. 21 of the 2nd February, 1889.

Bankruptcy of Mr. Spartali.

That it should be mentioned that, in 1884, Mr. Spartali, who was then carrying on business as a merchant in this country under the style of Spartali and Co., became unable to discharge his liabilities, and that on the 1st December of that year a receiving order under "The Bankruptcy Act, 1883," was made with regard to his estate.

Composition with his creditors.

That that order was, however, subsequently (i.e., on the 21st April, 1885) rescinded by the Court, who sanctioned a scheme of composition which was proposed by the debtor, and accepted by his creditors; and that Mr. Spartali had since resumed and now carried on business under his original style of Messrs. Spartali and Co. (Mr. Spartali, 2nd February, 1889).

Present position of case.

That Mr. Spartali (by his letter of the 6th February) contended that Messrs. Caravia, the persons who had laid the embargo upon the money payable to him by the Greek Government, were impostors, and that he had forwarded an authenticated certificate from the trustee in bankruptcy, declaring that they had already received composition of the debt for which they had attached the money (Mr. Spartali, 6th February, 1889, and Sir E. Monson's No. 149 of the 16th June).

That it appeared from Sir E. Monson's Report (No. 32 of the 14th February, 1889) that the Greek Government were quite unable to take any action in the matter, as the case was now in the hands of the Greek Tribunals. That, for reasons which were explained at length in the same despatch, Mr. Spartali was advised to lose no time in assigning the money to some third person to whom the Greek Government could pay it as soon as the embargo was raised.

That those recommendations were brought to Mr. Spartali's notice, and in reply to a request which he made (Mr. Spartali, 16th February) that M. Tricoupi should be asked to remit the money at once to England, he was informed that Her Majesty's Government could not request the Greek Government to disregard an order of attachment granted by a competent Greek Tribunal.

That a similar communication was made to Her Majesty's Minister at Athens, to whom, however, it was pointed out that Her Majesty's Government would be justified in complaining if any delay of justice should occur.

That Mr. Spartali followed the advice given him, and transferred his claim to the sum of money in dispute to a Mr. Whiting, who on his part executed a power of attorney empowering Her Majesty's Minister at Athens to receive the money (see Mr. Spartali of the 3rd April, and Sir E. Monson's No. 71 of the 5th April).

That the latest phases of the case, with which much political feeling was mixed up, would be found in Sir E. Monson's despatches Nos. 120 and 137 of the 21st May and 5th June respectively.

That there appeared to be every prospect of protracted and vexatious legal proceedings, and no probability that the Greek Government would consent to withdraw the case from the cognizance of the Tribunals.

That it therefore became a question for consideration whether, having regard to the fact that the money had actually been voted by the Greek Chamber for a specific purpose, and also to the other circumstances of the case, Her Majesty's Government was justified in insisting on its immediate payment to Her Majesty's Minister at Athens, who had been authorized to receive it under the power of attorney of Mr. Whiting, to whom it had been assigned by Mr. Spartali.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the question more particularly submitted therein, as well as with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We were also honoured with a note from Sir Philip Currie, dated the 5th instant, inclosing a further despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Athens relative to the matter in question.*

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

As to immediate payment of money to Her Majesty's Minister.

That, in our opinion, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, Her Majesty's Government would not be justified in insisting upon the immediate payment of the money to Her Majesty's Minister at Athens.

It appears that on the 7th May a notice was given on behalf of Mr. Whiting that, in default of payment by the Greek Government, he would take legal proceedings to set aside the attachment, and Sir E. Monson states in his despatch No. 120 of the 21st May that the Greek Government had a period of six weeks within which to decide as to the payment of the money.

Matter should be decided by the Tribunals.

We think the question is properly one for the decision of the legal Tribunals, and that, in the present circumstances, Her Majesty's Government would not be justified in acting upon the assumption that those Tribunals will fail in dealing promptly and justly with the case.

HAÏTI.

No. 24.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received January 25.)

My Lord,
Royal Courts of Justice, January 24, 1889.

Haïtian blockade of Gonaïves. Protest and losses of British subjects.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a Petition (see inclosure in Mr. McGuffie's and Mr. Purgold's joint letter of the 16th November) signed by various British subjects resident and engaged in commerce at the port of Gonaïves, in the Island of Haïti, protesting against the recent blockade of that port by the Provisional Government of the island, and calling attention of Her Majesty's Government to the losses occasioned to themselves in connection therewith.

That the circumstances attendant on the blockade in question were, in so far as they were then known to Her Majesty's Government, shortly as follows:—

That on the 16th October Her Majesty's Consul-General in Haïti reported in a despatch that civil war had commenced in that Republic, and that he had been officially informed on the 13th by the Provisional Government established on the deposition of President Salomon that they had decided on the bombardment of the towns of Gonaives and St. Marc. (See Mr. Zohrab's No. 46.)

That on the 15th October they issued a Decree notifying the blockade of the ports of Cape Haïtian, Gonaïves, and St. Marc.

That on the 23rd Mr. Zohrab reported that the Haïtian northern ports were effectively blockaded, and that two vessels belonging to the United States had been captured for running the blockade, and, on the 31st October, that the ports of Jacmel and Port de Paix were also blockaded. (See Mr. Zohrab's telegrams, the 23rd and 31st October.)

That Notices accordingly were inserted in the "London Gazette" of the 2nd, 6th, and 9th November.

That according to a telegram published in the "Times" of the 8th November from New York, the troops of the Provisional Government had occupied Jacmel, which had been reopened to commerce.

That no notice of that fact having at that time reached Her Majesty's Government officially, Mr. Zohrab's attention was called to it, as well as to certain omissions of detail in the notices of blockade sent home by him (to Mr. Zohrab, No. 8, of the 14th November), but that on the 26th November a despatch arrived from him announcing the surrender of Jacmel to the Government. (No. 52, 6th November.)

That Mr. Herbert, who was in charge of Her Majesty's Legation at Washington, having inquired whether the blockade of Haïtian ports was recognized by Her Majesty's Government (Mr. Herbert's telegram No. 38 of the 21st November), he was informed of the nature of the Notices published in the "London Gazette." (To Mr. Herbert, telegram No. 47, 24th November.)

Action of United States as to captured American ship.

That from further telegrams received from Mr. Herbert (8th and 13th December) it appeared that the United States' Government were sending four men-of-war to enforce the surrender of an American ship captured by the de facto Government of Haïti for running the blockade.

That a narrative of the circumstances which led to the rising in certain parts of the Republic, and of the election of Senator Legitime as Chief of the Executive Power, was given in Mr. Zohrab's despatches Nos. 42, 43, and 47, of the 2nd, 9th, and 18th October; while the grounds upon which the Signatories to the Petition alleged that the proceedings of the Provisional Government were unlawful would be found set out in that document itself.

That other papers bearing more generally upon the subject were also noted in the accompanying list, and were annexed for our information.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to (1) whether the protest of the petitioners was well founded and called for a representation on their behalf from Her Majesty's Government to that of Haïti, and, if so (2) on what grounds such a representation might most properly be based.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Report—

No grounds for making a claim.

That we are unable, upon the facts as at present disclosed, to see any grounds for Her Majesty's Government making any claim against the Haïtian Government on account of losses caused by their action.

We have, &c.

No. 25.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received January 25.)

My Lord,
Royal Courts of Justice, January 24, 1889.

Blockade of Haïtian ports.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 10th instant, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 21st ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the further papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the blockades of certain ports belonging to Haïti, which had been established by the Provisional Government of that Republic.

That the circumstances under which those ports had been closed, and the manner in which the blockade had been maintained, were as follows:—

Inefficiency of blockade.

That in a despatch dated the 25th November, 1888, Consul-General Zohrab stated that "the blockade of the northern ports was maintained, but in so lame a way that it is really ineffective, and coasting vessels go frequently into the different harbours with ammunition and provisions from Monte Christo, in the Dominican Republic, where a depôt has been formed."

That, when acknowledging and accepting the intimation made by the Provisional Government of the blockade of Cape Haïti, Gonaïves, and St. Marc, Mr. Zohrab had reminded that Government (16th October, 1888) "that by international law a blockade to be respected must be effective," and that he had inquired "whether the blockade would be maintained by an armed force sufficient to make it respected," but to which observation and inquiry he did not appear to have received any reply from the Haïtian Government.

Decree closing certain ports.

That on the 13th December the Councillor in charge of the Department for Foreign Affairs forwarded to Mr. Zohrab a Decree of the National Assembly, dated the 10th of that month (and a copy of which was inclosed in Mr. Zohrab's despatch No. 57), temporarily closing the ports of St. Marc, Gonaïves, Port de Paix, and Cape Haïti to foreign trade, and suppressing the right to land or embark at the Grande Saline, at Mole St. Nicholas, and Fort Liberté.

British views as to such Decrees.

That it was not stated whether those ports were in the possession or control of the de facto Government or of the insurgents; and that Sir Julian Pauncefote was to observe that this country had always disputed the right of closing ports by Municipal Decree where such ports were in the possession of rebels, and had invariably maintained that for that purpose it was necessary to establish an effective belligerent blockade.

Law Officers' Reports.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to add that Haïti acceded, on the 17th September, 1856, to the Declaration of Paris of the 16th April, 1856, respecting maritime law, and that he was to refer to the Reports of the Law Officers of the Crown mentioned in the accompanying list.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, together with those transmitted to us on the 21st December, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the Decree of the National Assembly of Haïti, dated the 10th December last, temporarily closing the ports of St. Marc, Gonaïves, and Port de Paix and Cape Haïti to foreign trade, and suppressing the right to land or embark at the Grande Saline, at Mole St. Nicholas, and at Fort Liberté, should be notified in the "London Gazette."

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was also to request that we would furnish your Lordship with any further observations we might have to offer on the subject.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and in obedience to your Lordship's commands have the honour to

Report—

Should publish Decree in the "Gazette" as a communication;

That, in the absence of any evidence that the ports named in the Decree are actually in the possession of the rebels, and that the Decree is issued as a belligerent act, we are of opinion that it would be advisable to publish such Decree in the "London Gazette;" but we think the Decree should be published by itself as a communication, so as to avoid any inference that Her Majesty's Government recognize that the ports are effectively closed.

and inform Haïtians of the fact.

We are further of opinion that the Government of Haïti should be informed that the Decree has been so published upon the assumption that it was issued for commercial and fiscal purposes; and that Her Majesty's Government does not admit that ports, when in the possession of insurgent forces, can be closed against foreign commerce otherwise than by a regular and effective blockade.

Instructions to Consul as to difference between closing of ports by Decree and by blockade.

It might be as well also to call the attention of the British Consul-General at Port-au-Prince to the distinction between a prohibition against the entering of ports issued by a Government for municipal purposes and the establishment of a blockade.

We have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received June 7.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, June 7, 1889.

Case of the "Mercedes," armed in the U. S. by insurgents, and commissioned by an U. S. citizen.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. H. Sanderson's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the proceedings of the steamer "Mercedes," a vessel acting in the service of, and (as was supposed) under some species of commission from, the leaders of the insurrection which was now raging in the Island of Haïti.

That the "Mercedes" was originally an American vessel of about 200 tons register, and considerable speed, sailing under the name of the "Novelty."

That she was purchased last year by an agent of the Haïtian insurgents, and having received arms and ammunition in Boston and New York, was permitted, notwithstanding the protests of the Haïtian Minister at Washington, to clear for San Domingo.

That having arrived off that island she was put into commission by an American citizen, named Compton (who was formerly in command of the "Haïtian Republic," an American vessel which was captured for breach of blockade by the Haïtian Government ship-of-war "Dessalines," and commenced a career as a hostile cruizer in the interests of the insurgents.

Capture of a British schooner; imprisonment of crew.

That information had reached Her Majesty's Consul-General at Port-au-Prince to the effect that on some date between the 15th and 22nd April the "Mercedes" fired at and captured a British schooner off the port of St. Marc, and, after having removed a portion of her cargo, as well as her crew (five) and passengers (ten), left the schooner derelict.

That the passengers and crew (some or all of whom were presumably British subjects) were then taken to St. Marc, where they were placed in close confinement and prevented from communicating with our Vice-Consul at that place.

"Mercedes" declared a pirate.

That on the 25th April a Decree was issued by President Légitime proclaiming the "Mercedes" to be a pirate, and authorizing all ships, of whatever nation, to attack, capture, and deliver her up to the authorities at Port-au-Prince.

Piracy doubtful.

That it appeared doubtful, however, whether the facts of the case warranted Her Majesty's Government in considering the vessel in question as a pirate, or in treating her as such.

That the Government of Haïti, by proclaiming a blockade jure gentium of that portion of the coast which was in the possession of the insurgents, had recognized the latter as belligerents, while the proceedings of the "Mercedes," although undoubtedly in excess of the rights of a belligerent in respect of neutrals, did not appear to be in such gross or barbarous violation of the recognized usages of war as to justify the State against whose subjects they were directed in regarding them as piratical.

Proposed instructions for release of crew and passengers.

That at the same time it was conceived that they were of a character which not only justified, but required, vigorous action on the part of Her Majesty's Government, and that it was thought that it might be advisable at once to communicate with the Naval Commander-in-chief on the West Indian Station, and to direct him to dispatch a sufficient force to St. Marc, and to demand the immediate and unconditional release of any British subjects who might be there illegally detained; and in the event of his demand not being forthwith complied with, and of no adequate explanation of the circumstances being afforded him, to proceed to use any forcible measures which he found necessary to insure compliance with such demands.

That Sir T. H. Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the course indicated above was such as was right and proper in the circumstances.

That your Lordship would be glad, at the same time, to be favoured with any further observations or suggestions which might occur to us with reference to the case.

Reports as to "Mercedes" false.

We were also honoured with a note from Sir Thomas Sanderson, dated the 5th instant, inclosing a letter from the Admiralty, according to which information appeared to have reached the officer in command of Her Majesty's naval forces at Jamaica to the effect that the reports in regard to the proceedings of the "Mercedes" were false.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordships commands, have the honour to

Report—

Approve proposed course.

That, in our opinion, the course proposed to be taken was entirely right and proper.

We have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received July 9.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, July 8, 1889.

Blockade of Haïtian ports by Provisional Government.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. H. Sanderson's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the question of the blockade of certain ports belonging to Haïti established by the Provisional Government of that Republic.

That the circumstances under which the blockade was established had already been before us, and formed the subject of our two Reports of the 24th January last.

That subsequent to those Reports, the notice of the 5th February last was inserted in the "London Gazette."

Blockade ineffective.

That on the representations of the "Atlas" Steam-ship Company that the blockades were ineffective, and ignored by the Government of the United States, who gave their trading vessels the protection of their naval forces against the Haïtian blockading ships, reports were called for from the British naval authorities, and Mr. Zohrab, Her Majesty's Consul-General in Haïti. That the former had not yet arrived, but that Mr. Zohrab telegraphed on the 14th June that the blockade had become absurdly ineffective, and that he had notified the Haïtian Government and the ships' agents at Port-au-Prince that it would not be respected.

Proposed notice as to its non-recognition,

That the question now arose whether, in the circumstances, Her Majesty's Government was justified in considering that the blockade had become ineffective, and consequently not binding upon neutral vessels, and, if so, whether a notice should be inserted in the "London Gazette" stating that, in consequence of the blockade having plainly ceased to be effective, Her Majesty's Representative in Haïti had notified the Haïtian Government that it could no longer be respected, and that British vessels entering or leaving ports in the possession of the insurgents must not be molested by the cruizers of the Haïtian (Provisional) Government.

and instructions for protection of British ships.

That Sir T. H. Sanderson was further to inquire whether, in the event of British vessels being molested after the issue of such notice, in their attempts to enter or depart from the ports alleged by the Decree of the Haïtian Government to be blockaded, Her Majesty's naval forces on the station should be instructed to intervene for the purpose of securing free access to and egress from such ports to such vessels.

That Sir T. H. Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our earliest consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted therein, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the matter.

Non-recognition notified to Government.

We have also the honour to acknowledge the receipt of Sir T. H. Sanderson's letter of the 6th instant, inclosing a despatch, dated the 12th June, from Her Majesty's Consul-General in Haïti, reporting a conversation with the President and other Members of the Government of Haïti, in which he gave them notice that the blockade of their ports would no longer be respected by British ships.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Approve proposed notice and instructions.

No. 28.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received May 21.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, May 20, 1889.

Slave Trade Treaty with Italy.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying draft of a Treaty between Her Majesty and the King of Italy for the suppression of the African Slave Trade.*

Draft of, for approval.

That the draft Treaty was, as would be seen from the marginal notes, framed with certain modifications upon the lines of the Treaty with Turkey of 1880, and that of 1841 between this country, Austria, Prussia, and Russia.

That it would be seen that Article II omitted all reference to the proviso of Article II of the Treaty of 1841 that cruziers exercising the right of search should be furnished with warrants, and commanded by officers of a certain rank.

That it was thought that, in the altered conditions under which both the Slave Trade itself and any naval operations connected with its suppression were now carried on, there was no fear of abuses arising from the omission of such a proviso.

* Treaty No. 837.

1889

That all allusion to the search of vessels under the convoy of a ship of war was also omitted, as it was improbable that the case provided for in Article VII of the Treaty of 1841 would arise.

That no special stipulations had been made as to the proceedings at the port where captured vessels are delivered over to the local authorities, beyond securing, in Articles IV and VI, that the proceedings should take place before the competent Tribunal.

That with the view of more effectually dealing with the modern custom of transporting slaves in native craft, modifications had been made in the enumeration of those Articles and other signs which, when found on a suspected vessel, were to be considered as primâ facie evidence of her illicit character. That those were contained in Article V.

That Sir T. V. Lister was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the proposed Treaty was one that might properly be concluded, together with any general observations which we might have to offer upon it.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Report—

Approve draft as altered.

That, in our opinion, the draft Treaty, as altered and initialled by us, is one that may properly be concluded.

No. 29.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received August 24.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, August 21, 1889.

Sequestration of cargo of "Thames" on account of suit against captain.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir James Fergusson's letter of the 10th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to the proceedings of the Italian authorities and legal Tribunals with reference to the case of a Belgian subject named Eckelheimer, who, having shipped as steward on board the British steam-ship "Thames" at New York, and having deserted from that vessel at Palermo, subsequently brought an action against her master, Mr. Dale, in the Tribunals of the latter port.

That the history of the case up to date was succinctly given in the two Memoranda inclosed with the papers, dated respectively the 12th November, 1888, and the 18th May, 1889, but that the somewhat voluminous correspondence was also inclosed in case we should desire to refer more particularly to any portions of it.

Appeal not carried to higher Courts.

That it would be seen that, although the advisability of taking that course was privately suggested to the owners of the "Thames," the case had not been carried upon appeal by them to the ultimate Italian Tribunals, and that it was therefore somewhat uncertain whether those Courts would or would not uphold the Judgment of the Tribunal of Commerce, or ratify the arguments put forward in support of the action of that Court by Signor Damiani in his reply of the 21st February last to the informal representations which had been addressed to him by Her Majesty's Embassy at Rome upon the subject.

Case of breach of international law.

That the fact that the case had not been carried upon appeal before the highest legal Tribunals of Italy had, no doubt, an important bearing upon the question of the propriety of diplomatic interference in the matter on the part of Her Majesty's Government, but that, at the same time, the actual proceedings, so far as they had gone, seemed to constitute, in effect, an evasion of the ordinary principles of international law, whereby a British ship was, subject to certain exceptions immaterial to the present purpose, considered to carry British law with her, and all breaches of discipline, either on the high seas or in foreign ports, as well as all matters arising out of the contract with the crew, were to be judged of by, and construed according to, British law.

British Treaty rights.

That, moreover, under Article XII of the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation between Great Britain and Italy of the 15th June, 1883, it was provided that Her Majesty's Consular officers in Italy should enjoy "all the faculties, privileges, exemptions, and immunities of every kind which are, or shall be, granted to the most favoured nation;" while by Article XXI of the Italo-Spanish Consular Convention of the 21st July, 1867, it is agreed that the Consular officers of the two Contracting Powers "shall be exclusively charged with the maintenance of internal order on board the merchant-ships of their nation, and they alone shall take cognizance of the questions of whatever kind which arise between the captain, the officers, and the sailors, and especially of those relating to pay, and to the fulfilment of reciprocal agreements."

That it was therefore contended that, independently of the general principles of international law which were usually recognized as applicable in such matters, and through the combined operation of the most-favoured-nation clause in the Anglo-Italian Treaty of 1883, and of Article XXI in the Italo-Spanish Convention of 1867, and other similar Articles in Consular Conventions to which Italy was a party (as, for instance, Article XIII of the Franco-Italian Convention of the 26th July, 1862), Italy had entered into a special Treaty obligation which was directly applicable to the case now under consideration.

As to necessity for further action.

That having regard also to the fact that questions of great importance to British shipping interests were involved, and that the mode in which the Italian authorities had treated them might, if allowed to pass without any formal protest, possibly be invoked as a precedent in future cases of the same nature, it became necessary carefully to consider whether it was not incumbent on Her Majesty's Government to take some further steps in the matter.

That Sir James Fergusson was therefore to request that we would take the various papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether there had been any such violation either of the general principles of international law or of the provisions of special Treaties applicable to the particular case in question, or whether any other, and, if so, what, grounds existed such as would justify a further representation to the Italian Government.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

The proceedings at Palermo a violation of British rights.

That, in our opinion, the proceedings instituted at Palermo, which resulted in the sequestration of the freight of the British steam-ship "Thames," constituted a violation of the rights of Great Britain under the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation of 1883, under Articles XI and XII of which the subjects of Great Britain are entitled to the same privileges and immunities, and the Consuls of Great Britain to the same faculties and privileges, as are enjoyed by the subjects or Consuls of any other country.

Further action necessary.

In our opinion it is incumbent on Her Majesty's Government to make further representations to the Italian Government with the view of procuring the removal of the sequestration pronounced in the present case, and the acceptance of the rule laid down in the procès-verbal of the meeting of the Consular Body of the 20th August, 1888.

JAPAN.

No. 30.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received May 14.)

Royal Courts of Justice, May 13, 1889.

My Lord,

Japanese Treaty revision.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 25th March last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to proposals recently made to Her Majesty's Government by that of Japan for the conclusion of a new Treaty of Amity, Commerce, and Navigation by means of separate negotiation.

That similar proposals had also been made to the Great European Powers and to the United States, and that the Treaty between the United States and Japan was reported to have been signed at Tôkiô on the 20th February last.

That the Articles of the proposed Treaty were given with Mr. Trench's despatch No. 2, Confidential, of the 1st January, 1889.

Question of m.-f.-n. treatment clauses.

That amongst other questions involved in the consideration of the draft Treaty was that of the most-favoured-nation treatment clauses (Articles VI, VII, X, XVIII, and XIX.)

That we should observe that in the last-named Article the most-favoured-nation treatment was to be conditional.

That some discussion on that subject appeared to have taken place between Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and the Japanese Minister for Foreign Affairs, which resulted in the drafting of two alternative most-favoured-nation clauses, to either of which the Japanese were prepared to give their adhesion, but on the distinct understanding that the new Treaty proposals would in substance be accepted by Her Majesty's Government.

That there were also other points in the draft Treaty which would require careful consideration, and in regard to which Her Majesty's Government were in communication with the Governments of the Great Powers interested in the question of Treaty revision with Japan.

That in the meanwhile the Japanese Chargé d'Affaires in London had been informed that Her Majesty's Government wished it to be clearly understood that, whatever might be the result of the separate negotiations which his Government proposed to carry out with the other Treaty Powers, the existing rights of Great Britain under the most-favoured-nation clause of the Treaty of the 26th August, 1858 (Article XXIII) would be respected; and that the British Government and British subjects would be allowed free and equal participation in all privileges, immunities, and advantages that might be granted to the Government or subjects of any other Power.

Interpretation put by Japan on m.-f.-n. Article (XXIII) of Treaty of 1858.

That to that intimation Viscount Okabé had replied in a letter dated the 5th March, in which he stated, by direction of his Government, that they "cannot admit any interpretation of Article XXIII of the Treaty of the 26th August, 1858, between this country and Japan, that would secure to the former unconditional participation [in privileges] conditionally granted to a third Power."

That with the papers forwarded to us would be found a Confidential Memorandum, drawn up by Mr. H. Farnall, of the Foreign Office, on cases involving the interpretation of the most-favoured-nation and national treatment clauses in Commercial Treaties.

That the view taken of the most-favoured-nation clause by the Japanese Government apparently coincided with that which had been held by the Government of the United States, to the effect that favours granted to one nation in return for certain other favours might not be claimed by another nation under a most-favoured-nation clause (vide Memorandum, p. 33 (C)).

That in Article XXIII of the Treaty of the 26th August, 1858, between this country and Japan, it was laid down that "the British Government and its subjects will be allowed free and equal participation in all privileges, immunities, and advantages that may have been, or may be hereafter, granted by His Majesty the Tycoon of Japan to the Governments or subjects of any other nations."

That the special meaning which the Japanese Government appeared to be endeavouring to give to the word "equal" was under discussion between France and the United States in 1821, when the question arose as to the interpretation to be given to Article VIII of the Treaty between France and the United States of America of the 30th April, 1803, ceding Louisiana to the United States (see Memorandum of the 4th March, 1889, p. 37, and State Papers, vol. viii, p. 465).

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers transmitte with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the interpretation apparently sought to be put by the Japanese Government upon Article XXIII of the Treaty of the 26th August, 1858, between Japan and Great Britain, was one which could be admitted by Her Majesty's Government.

We were further honoured with a letter from Sir T. H. Sanderson, dated the 9th ultimo, stating that a despatch* had just been received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Tôkiô reporting that a Treaty had been concluded between Japan and Mexico, in which the first-named country did not concede to Mexico the extra-territorial rights in Japan which had hitherto always been granted to foreign Powers making Treaties with Japan.

That Sir T. H. Sanderson was to inclose a copy of the despatch from Mr. Trench, and to request that we would take it into our consideration in connection with the papers forwarded to us by Sir Philip Currie on the 25th March last.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and in obedience to you Lordship's commands have the honour to

Report—

Interpretation put by Japan upon Article XXIII cannot be admitted.

That, in our opinion, the interpretation which is put by the Japanese Government upon Article XXIII of the Treaty of 1858 is not one which can be admitted by Her Majesty's Government.

Question whether Article XXIII has any relation to commerce and navigation apart from personal privileges or immunities.

We think it right to add that a grave question might be raised as to whether Article XXIII has any relation to commerce and navigation apart from personal privileges or immunities.

We have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received July 5.)

Royal Courts of Justice, July 4, 1889.

My Lord,

Interpretation of m.-f.-n. clauses of Treaties with Japan.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. H. Sanderson's letter of the 10th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the question of the interpretation of the most-favoured-nation clause in the Treaties between this country and Japan.

That a previous Report from us on the subject, dated the 13th May, 1889, would be found among the papers inclosed.

That the Treaty which at present governed the relations of the two countries was that of the 26th August, 1858 (Hertslet's Treaties, vol. xi, p. 396), Article XXIII of which dealt with most-favoured-nation treatment.

Japan declines to grant privileges under such clauses unconditionally.

That in reply to the statement made by Viscount Okabé, the Japanese Chargé d'Affaires, in a note dated the 5th March, to the effect that his Government could not admit any interpretation of the above-named Article that would secure to this country unconditional participation (in privileges) conditionally granted to a third Power, he was informed in your Lordship's note of the 24th May, that the doctrine laid down by the Japanese Government was not sufficiently developed to enable your Lordship to comment on it in detail, but that, in refraining from a discussion which would probably be premature, your Lordship must not be understood as making any admission in prejudice to the rights which Great Britain had always claimed under that Article.

Reservation of British rights.

Japanese Treaty with Mexico.

That we were aware that information had reached Her Majesty's Government of the conclusion of a Treaty between Japan and Mexico, in which Japan had not conceded to Mexico the extra-territorial rights which had hitherto been granted to Powers making Treaties with Japan, but which it was understood would confer upon the subjects of Mexico complete freedom of residence and travel in Japan (see Mr. Trench's No. 29 of the 26th February, 1889).

That Mr. Fraser, Her Majesty's Minister in Japan, had now reported that the Treaty between Japan and Mexico had been ratified on both sides, and that he had represented that its publication would bring forward the question of the interpretation of the most-favoured-nation clause in our Treaties with Japan (see Mr. Fraser's telegram No. 17 of the 3rd June, 1889).

That he had been informed, in reply, that by a note to the Japanese Chargé d'Affaires (the 26th February, 1889), Her Majesty's Government had already expressly reserved their rights under Article XXIII of the Treaty of 1858 (see telegram to Mr. Fraser No. 10 of the 5th June, 1889).

That Sir T. H. Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the notes to Viscount Okabé of the 26th February and 24th May last contained a sufficient reservation of our rights under the most-favoured-nation clause of the Treaty of 1858, or whether, on the publication of the new Treaty between Japan and Mexico, Her Majesty's Government ought formally to claim the right for British subjects in Japan to travel freely and reside inland, and that applications to the Japanese authorities for passports should only be made under protest.

That your Lordship would also be glad to be furnished with any general observations we might have to offer on the subject.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Reservation of British rights sufficient.

That, in our opinion, the notes to Viscount Okabé of the 26th February and the 24th May do contain a sufficient reservation of the rights of Great Britain under the most-favoured-nation clause of the Treaty of 1858.

As to more formal intimation.

It may, however, be desirable, upon the publication of the Treaty with Mexico, to give a more formal intimation to the Government of Japan that Her Majesty's Government intends to insist upon the claim already made, and that passports will henceforward be asked for and accepted only under protest.

No. 32.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received July 25.)

Royal Courts of Justice, July 24, 1889.

My Lord,

Protection of K. K. Kingdon, illegitimate son of N. P. Kingdon.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of a letter which it was proposed, should we see no objection, to address to Mr. N. P. Kingdon, in reply to a communication which was received from that gentleman on the 12th instant.

That Mr. N. P. Kingdon, who was believed to be a natural-born British subject, requested, as would be seen, that his putative son, King Kiku Kingdon, now residing in Yokohama, Japan, might receive "protection as a British subject in Her Majesty's Consulate at Kanagawa" under the following circumstances.

N. P. Kingdon subsequently married the mother.

That Mr. King Kiku Kingdon was born at Yokohama on the 26th September, 1866. That at the time of his birth, Mr. N. P. Kingdon was not married to the child's mother, who was then a Japanese subject. That he had since, however, with the special permission of the Japanese Government, accorded on the application of Her Majesty's Consul, married the mother, who had thereby become a British subject both by Japanese and English law.

Antecedents of K. K. Kingdon, whom the Japanese authorities do not regard as of Japanese nationality.

That Mr. King Kiku Kingdon, the son, had from the age of 14 upwards been educated in England, and, as a member of the Queen's Westminster Rifle Volunteer Corps, had taken the oath of allegiance to Her Majesty.

That he only returned to Japan at the close of last year, after a residence in England of over seven years, for the purpose of pursuing his profession as a civil engineer.

That he had never been registered as a Japanese subject, and that it was stated that he was not regarded by the Japanese authorities as of Japanese nationality.

Circular of May 29, 1876

That in 1876 a Circular Instruction was issued by the then Secretary of State to Her Majesty's Consuls abroad, directing them not to enter in the registers of their Consulates the births of the illegitimate children of British parents. (See Circular of the 29th May, 1876.)

Case of Marie Gouder.

That on the 11th November, 1884, however, the then Law Officers and Dr. Deane, Q.C., reported, with reference to the case of the illegitimate infant daughter of one Marie Gouder, a British subject, resident in Switzerland, that although the child, having been born outside the British dominions, was not, strictly speaking, a British subject, there was no objection, in order to surmount the difficulties raised by the Swiss authorities in consequence of her having no recognized nationality, to include her name in the British passport given to her mother.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was also to call our attention to the Mosenthal case (Law Officers' Reports for 1883, Nos. 48, 49, and 50), as presenting considerable analogy to that now under consideration.

Case of Mosenthal junior.

That with regard to Mr. Mosenthal, junior, the Law Officers and Dr. Deane were, as would be seen, of opinion that, if his birth in Germany did not, according to the Law of that Empire, make him a German subject, there was no objection to the registration of his birth at the British Vice-Consulate at Breslau (Nos. 48 and 49).

1889

That they were further of opinion that, although the mere fact of registration at a Consulate had no legal effect as regarded the status of the child that it was, in cases of doubt, more convenient that the question of nationality should be left open on the Register (No. 50).

Proposed reply to Mr. N. P. Kingdon.

That it had been suggested that, having regard to the peculiar circumstances of Mr. Kiku Kingdon's case, it might appropriately be treated in the manner indicated in the draft letter to his father, Mr. N. P. Kingdon, inclosed with the papers; but that before dispatching that letter or instructions in its sense to Her Majesty's Minister at Tôkiô, your Lordship would be glad if we would take the draft into our consideration in connection with the other papers transmitted with Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter, and would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether its terms were right and proper for the circumstances, or whether, and, if so, how, it was desirable that they should be altered or modified.

Question whether K. K. Kingdon would, on registration, come within the expression "British subject" as used in the Orders in Council.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to add that it was conceived that Mr. Kiku Kingdon would, if registered at the Consulate, become a "British-protected person" within the meaning of the "China, Japan, and Corea Order in Council, 1884," and would, as such, be included for jurisdiction purposes within the meaning of the expression "British subject" as used in the China and Japan Orders in Council; but that your Lordship would, at the same time, be glad to be favoured with our opinion on that point also.

Proposed limitation of the precedent to cases in which parents subsequently contracted a valid marriage.

That should we approve of the course which had been suggested in Mr. Kiku Kingdon's case, your Lordship would propose to confine the precedent which would thus be introduced for the registration at Her Majesty's Consulates in Japan of the illegitimate children of a British father and a Japanese mother strictly to cases in which the parents had, subsequently to the birth of such children, contracted a marriage valid by English law.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Approve draft despatch. K. K. Kingdon would come within the expression "British subject." Approve suggested limitation of the precedent.

That we approve the terms of the draft despatch as altered and initialled by us.

We are of opinion that Mr. Kiku Kingdon will, on registration, be included, for purposes of jurisdiction, within the meaning of the expression "British subject" as used in the China and Japan Orders in Council.

We approve the suggested limitation of the precedent in this case.

We have, &c.

Annex.

Draft of Letter to Mr. Kingdon.

Sir,
Foreign Office, July , 1889.

I AM directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 11th ultimo relative to the status in Japan of your son, Mr. King Kiku Kingdon.

In reply, I am to inform you that illegitimate children born abroad of British parents are not British subjects, and that the only manner in which Mr. King Kiku Kingdon could [~~legally~~] acquire British nationality would be by obtaining naturalization [~~within Her Majesty's Dominions~~] in the United Kingdom; and that even so, his acquired British nationality would not avail him in Japan, if, under the circumstances of his birth, he were a Japanese subject according to Japanese law.

You state, however, that he is not recognized as a Japanese subject by the Japanese authorities; and if this be the case, he has, strictly speaking, no nationality at all. Under these circumstances, it would be best for Mr. K. K. Kingdon to be naturalized in the United Kingdom, but if this course cannot be adopted, as it appears that both his parents are now British subjects, Lord Salisbury is willing to instruct Her Majesty's Minister at Tôkiô to inquire officially whether the Japanese Government claim Mr. King Kiku Kingdon as a Japanese subject; and, if the reply should be in the negative, instruct Her Majesty's Consul at Kanagawa, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, to register him as a British subject for purposes of protection, making, however, an exact entry in the register of the circumstances under which British protection has been extended to him.

You must [~~however~~] distinctly understand [~~that registration at a British Consulate is not legal proof of British nationality. and~~] that such registration will have no effect to alter Mr. King Kiku Kingdon's present legal status as to nationality, whatever that status may be.

Draft Anglo-Japanese Treaty. Article XX, as to jurisdiction.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list with reference to an important question which had arisen for practical consideration in connection with the proposed wording of Article XX of the draft Treaty of Amity, Commerce, and Navigation, now in the course of negotiation between Her Majesty's Government and that of Japan.

Proposals as to— Judicial arrangements

That the Japanese Government had determined to institute a new judicial organization based upon European principles, and to enact codes of law framed upon European models, and prepared with the assistance of European jurists.

That as a further security for the proper administration of those codes, the Japanese Government were ready to give assurances that a certain number of properly qualified European jurists should hold appointments as Judges in the Supreme Court, and should be associated with the Japanese Judges in the trial of Appeals before that Court in which foreigners were interested.

Limitation and abolition of Consular jurisdiction.

That it was provided in the proposed Treaty that, from the time those arrangements came into force, Consular jurisdiction in Japan should be exercised only within the limits of the foreign Settlements established by Treaty, and should, at the end of a certain number of years, entirely cease.

That in return for that concession, the Japanese Government agreed to throw the whole country open to foreign travel and commerce.

Voluntary submission of individuals to Japanese jurisdiction by Article XX.

That Article XX of the Treaty was proposed by the Japanese Government with the object of permitting British subjects, who were desirous of doing so, to submit themselves at once and altogether to the jurisdiction of the new Japanese Tribunals, both in civil and criminal matters, to the exclusion of British ex-territorial jurisdiction.

That the Article was of some importance, inasmuch as it was made a condition to the appointment of the European Judges that they should so submit themselves to Japanese jurisdiction.

Article as proposed by Japanese.

That Article XX, in the form in which alone the Japanese Government were willing to accept it, provided that:—

"In case any British subjects should at any time, in advance of the final abolition of British Consular jurisdiction, desire to submit themselves exclusively to Japanese jurisdiction, they may do so by making and filing with their own proper Consular authorities, and with the proper local Japanese authorities, formal declarations to that effect; but no such submission shall deprive the British Consular Courts of jurisdiction over such subjects which they would otherwise have in connection with liabilities incurred prior to such submission."

British amendments.

That in the counter-draft presented by the British negotiator, it was proposed to insert the word "civil" before the word "jurisdiction," and after the word "Japanese" in the early part of the Article, and thus to exclude criminal matters from its scope; but that that proposal had met with strong opposition from the Japanese Government, and that, for the reasons above stated, Her Majesty's Government did not desire to insist upon it, if they could, without serious objection on legal grounds, accept the Article as originally drafted.

Means for abandoning British jurisdiction.

That in that connection, a consideration of the means by, and limitations subject to, which Her Majesty could abandon, either wholly or in part, ex-territorial jurisdiction exercisable under the provisions of "The Foreign Jurisdiction Acts, 1843 to 1878," and Orders in Council passed thereunder, appeared to be involved: that doubt had been felt as to the power, or, at any rate, the advisability, of Her Majesty ceding such criminal jurisdiction when it had once been exercised, otherwise than by virtue of the provisions of a special-enabling Act of Parliament.

That it was, however, suggested that, having regard to the manner in which ex-territorial, as distinguished from territorial, jurisdiction, was acquired by and became vested in Her Majesty, as well as to the scope of the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts under which it was exercised and enjoyed, Her Majesty could abandon it, either wholly or in part, without any special or further Imperial Parliamentary legislation ad id. in each particular case, and could by Order in Council make such provisions, abolishing, suspending, or modifying its exercise, as to her from time to time might seem fit.

Precedents—Egypt, 1875;

That that view appeared to have been adopted in actual practice on previous occasions, and that in that connection Sir Thomas Sanderson was particularly to refer us to the Report of the then Law Officers of the Crown of the 15th October, 1875 (Law Officers, "Turkey No. 135 of 1875"), with reference to the means by which Her Majesty's Consular jurisdiction should be suspended upon the opening of the new Judicial Tribunals in Egypt, and also to the Order in Council of the 5th February, 1876, which was passed in accordance with the recommendations contained in that Report.

Tunis, 1884.

That that Order in Council merely suspended the jurisdiction of Her Majesty's Consular Courts in Egypt "until it should seem fit to Her Majesty the Queen, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, to otherwise order." But that the precedent then and thus established was, with the approval of the Law Officers of the Crown of the succeeding Administration (see their Report, "Tunis, No. 87, of the 1st January, 1884"), extended to a case in which it was desired not merely to suspend during pleasure, but to abolish Her Majesty's existing Consular jurisdiction so far as the particular place to be affected by the proposed Order in Council was concerned.

That accordingly, at the time of the abandonment of Her Majesty's Consular jurisdiction at Tunis in 1884, an Order in Council was passed abolishing the jurisdiction of Her Britannic Majesty's Court for that place, except as to pending cases (see Parliamentary Paper "Tunis No. 1 (1884)" and Order in Council of the 31st December, 1883), and that a similar course would suffice, no doubt, for carrying into execution the general arrangements of the proposed Treaty.

Present case not exactly similar.

But that the case which arose under Article XX differed from the precedent above referred to, in that it was not proposed by it at once to abolish Her Majesty's ex-territorial jurisdiction in Japan, or in any specific part of that country, but merely to authorize such British subjects as might desire to do so, at their option, to withdraw themselves from Her Majesty's jurisdiction, and to submit themselves exclusively to the Japanese Tribunals. That it was thought, however, that the distinction between the two cases was one of degree rather than of principle.

Questions as to—

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to—

1. Legal objections to Article XX;

1. Whether serious objection on grounds of law existed to the wording of Article XX as originally framed and quoted above;

2. Method of abandoning British jurisdiction;

2. Whether, if not, provision could effectively and properly be made by Her Majesty for carrying out the objects of that Article by an Order in Council passed under the provisions of the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts, without any further or special Parliamentary legislation; and

3. Irrevocability of voluntary submission.

3. Whether, if a British subject should submit himself exclusively to Japanese jurisdiction, under the provisions of Article XX, the effect of such submission on his part would be not only to withdraw him altogether from the ex-territorial jurisdiction of Her Majesty in Japan, but also to render such submission, when once made, irrevocable during the continuance of the temporary arrangement in contemplation of which the Article was framed.

That as the only point of importance now in controversy between the Governments of Great Britain and Japan upon the actual terms of the proposed Treaty was that indicated as still open with regard to Article XX (although certain other matters outside the Treaty still remained unsettled), and that as it was considered extremely desirable to conclude the negotiations at as early a date as possible, your Lordship would be greatly obliged if we would favour you with our opinion on the points now submitted at our earliest convenience.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

No objections to Article XX Order in Council sufficient.

That, in our opinion, no serious objections exist, on grounds of law, to the wording of Article XX as originally framed, and that an Order in Council will suffice without any further or special legislation.

Submission irrevocable during temporary arrangement.

In our opinion, the submission provided for in Article XX would be irrevocable during the continuance of the temporary arrangement in contemplation of which the Article is framed.

Pelicier Frères v. Consul Haggard.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 14th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin* with reference to an action which was brought last year in the Supreme Court of the Mauritius by the firm of Pelicier Frères against Mr. Haggard, Her Majesty's then Consul at Tamatave, in respect of acts done by him in his judicial capacity as Judge of the Consular Court in Madagascar.

That the circumstances of the case were as follows.

That, in the month of May 1887, Messrs. Pelicier Frères, a Creole firm established at Tamatave, in Madagascar, entered a plaint in Her Majesty's Consular Court at that place against one Louis Mairs, the agent in a distant part of Madagascar for the British firm of Messrs. Proctor Brothers, established at Tamatave, from whom they claimed 35 dollars for goods sold; and that a summons was issued on the 7th May by the Consul, calling upon Mairs to appear before him to answer the claim of the plaintiffs.

That on the return day Mairs did not personally appear, but that Mr. Proctor, who was allowed by the Court to represent him, produced a receipt for the sum claimed.

That the plaintiff's attorney (Mr. Roberts) then asked to be allowed to prove that the defendant had obtained possession of the receipt by fraud; and that he applied for a summons calling upon Mairs to appear personally before the Court to give evidence.

That Mr. Haggard stated (vide his despatch No. 115 of the 16th September, 1887) that, when the case was called on, he saw that the intention of Pelicier Frères, in bringing the action, was to deliberately endeavour to injure Messrs. Proctors' trade by removing their agent, M. Mairs, from his place, and so causing them great expense. That, upon the production of the signed receipt, which was acknowledged by the plaintiff Pelicier to be the receipt for the goods in question, he determined to dismiss the case at once as vexatious, but ultimately adjourned it for a week. That, in the interval, he received a most improper letter from Pelicier Frères, threatening to bring an action against him in the Supreme Court of the Mauritius if he failed to comply with their wishes, and to compel Mairs to appear in person in the proceedings then pending in the Consular Court.

That that application was accordingly refused by Mr. Haggard, who declared that he had private information convincing him that the case was a vexatious one, and that when the case came finally into Court he was of opinion that it should be dismissed without further hearing, a receipt from the plaintiffs for the sum claimed having been produced on behalf of the defendant, which receipt was, moreover, acknowledged by the plaintiff to have been given in respect of the special sum claimed.

That judgment was accordingly recorded for the defendant with costs.

That applications were then made by Pelicier's attorney to have affidavits and other documents sworn before Consul Haggard, with the view of applying for a writ of certiorari against him from the Supreme Court of the Mauritius.

That those applications were, however, in view of the vexatious nature of the previous proceedings and the threatening attitude of the defendants, refused by Consul Haggard.

That the affidavits, &c., were in consequence taken to the American Consul and sworn before him.

Trial in respect of acts done by Consul Haggard as Judge of Consular Court.

That M. Pelicier and his attorney then repaired to Mauritius and instituted proceedings in the Supreme Court, in pursuance of which a summons was issued, ordering Mr. Haggard to appear and show cause why a writ of certiorari should not be issued against him in the case of "Pelicier Frères v. Mairs;" while a further summons was granted in an action for damages instituted against Mr. Haggard in regard to acts which were stated by the plaintiffs to have constituted a flagrant abuse of his judicial powers as Her Majesty's Consul, and a denial of justice on his part (vide Consul Haggard's No. 139 of the 20th October, 1887, and inclosed copies of affidavits and documents deposited in the Court).

That in conformity with the instructions of the Secretary of State, Mr. Haggard proceeded to Mauritius to defend those proceedings, and was represented at the hearing by the Law Officers of the Crown for the Colony.

That the Supreme Court gave, on the 29th May, 1888, an interlocutory Judgment overruling a plea to the jurisdiction of the Court which had been submitted on Mr. Haggard's behalf, and permitting the parties to amend their pleadings.

Judgment given against Consul Haggard.

That on the 11th December, 1888, final Judgment was delivered, whereby Mr. Haggard was held liable, and ordered to pay 200 rupees as damages, together, with costs, amounting to 945 rupees 85 c.

That a full report of the proceedings and Judgment of the Supreme Court, together with a Confidential Report on that Judgment by the Procureur-Général of Mauritius, would be found in the printed inclosures to the Colonial Office letter of the 7th May.

That from the Procureur-Général's Report it would be seen that, in his opinion, there was, for reasons which he clearly explained, good ground to doubt the correctness of the Judgment, and that he also considered an appeal to the Privy Council against that Judgment was desirable.

That Mr. Haggard was not, however, entitled as a matter of right to appeal against the Judgment of the Supreme Court to the Queen in Council, the matter in dispute being under 1,000*l.*—the appealable amount fixed in the Order in Council of the 13th April, 1831; but that the question arose whether, in view of the importance of the decision of the Supreme Court, which, if unreversed, might form a precedent enabling persons who had been unsuccessful in litigation before the Consular Court in Madagascar to sue Her Majesty's Consul for damages, an application might not be properly made for special leave to appeal.

1. Was Judgment erroneous?
2. Can he appeal?

That Sir T. V. Lister was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with an opinion as to (1) whether the Judgment of the Supreme Court of the Mauritius was erroneous, and, if so, in what respects; and (2) whether the case was one in which, having regard to all the circumstances, an appeal for special leave to appeal should be made to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Appeal desirable.

That while we do not desire to express a decided judgment with regard to the action of the Supreme Court of the Mauritius, we are of opinion that the importance of the question makes it desirable that an application for special leave to appeal should be made to the Judicial Committee.

Mexican Claims Commission. Instructions to British Commissioner proposed by Sir S. St. John for settling questions still open.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 16th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to certain claims which had been submitted to the Mixed Commission now sitting, in pursuance of Article I of the Preliminary Agreement for the renewal of relations between Great Britain and Mexico of the 6th August, 1884, for the examination and liquidation of the outstanding claims of British subjects against the Federal Government of Mexico (see notification in "London Gazette" of the 3rd March, 1886, Print No. 5479, p. 4; Law Officers' Report, 20th August, 1887, print No. 5637, p. 34; and despatch No. 36 of the 1st September, 1887, to Sir Spenser St. John, Print No. 5637, pp. 36 and 37.).

That in the course of the examination of the various claims submitted to the Commission, the Mexican Commissioner found himself compelled, in obedience to precise instructions given him by his Government, to reject several claims on grounds which, in view of the instructions contained in your Lordship's despatch to Her Majesty's Legation No. 36 of the 1st September, 1887, the British Commissioner (to whom that despatch had been communicated) felt unable to admit.

That the claims in question might be divided, for convenience of classification, into six different groups; and that a short précis of each claim, or class of claims, and the grounds upon which the Mexican Commissioner considered them inadmissible, would be found in the various inclosures to Mr. Carden's No. 12 of the 27th September, 1888 (Print of January 1889, pp. 5-10).

That the Commission only awaited, in order to conclude its labours, an adjustment of the points now in controversy; and that, in those circumstances, Sir S.

St. John was given authority to come to the assistance of the Commissioners, and to endeavour, in conjunction with Señor Mariscal, to effect, within the general lines laid down in the despatch No. 36 of the 1st September, 1887, already referred to, some settlement of the questions still remaining open.

That his views upon the various points involved would be found stated in his despatch No. 2 of the 19th January, in which he had inclosed a draft of the instructions, should they meet with your Lordship's approval, he would propose to give Mr. Carden in the circumstances.

That before, however, communicating further with Sir S. St. John on the subject, your Lordship would be glad to learn whether the terms of the draft instruction were such as were, in our opinion, right and proper; or, if not, in what respects they might, in our view, advantageously be modified.

That Sir P. Currie was, therefore, to request that we would take the draft instruction and other papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted therein, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Approve the proposed instruction subject to certain amendments.

That in our opinion the draft instructions submitted to us are in substance correct; but we suggest the following amendments in the despatch:—

On p. 2, at the bottom of the page, we suggest the omission of the words "sudden...... England."

On p. 6, at line 8, we suggest the omission of the words "and has not profited by the plunder," and the substitution for them of the following words: "or by its neglect, or default, allowed them to be committed."

At p. 10 we suggest the omission of the reference to the case of neutral goods upon a belligerent vessel, and the substitution of the following sentence: "There is no principle of international law upon which this claim can be supported."

At the end of the despatch we suggest the addition of the words, "and cannot be considered as the acts of a Government accepted and obeyed by the people of Mexico, and by the public forces of that State."

Annex.*

Sir S. St. John to Consul Carden.

Mexico, , 1889.

Sir,

I HAVE examined the six groups of claims on which you and General Berriozabal differ in opinion, and which were referred to Lord Salisbury in your despatch No. 5, Claims, of the 27th September, 1888.

Extra duty.

Group I. Consumo.—As the English merchants in the city of Mexico were aware, they would have to pay 30 per cent. extra duty if they removed their goods from Vera Cruz to the capital, and as this arrangement, promoted by the Diplomatic Corps, affected merchants of all nationalities alike, no claim can be founded on its being a sudden increase of duty, ~~sudden increases of duty being the usual practice in England~~.

Contributions and war taxes.

With regard to contributions on capital and so-called war-taxes, every foreigner domiciled in a country is subject to its laws, and if taxes are impartially levied, has no right to expect exemption from payment. It appears to me that these claims should be rejected, and I advise their rejection.

T. Woolrich's claims:—

Group II.—The claims of Thomas Woolrich. There are three important ones:—

1. Sacking of house.

1. The sacking of his house by the Republican forces in 1866, when the town of Tehuantepec was taken by assault. Loss alleged, 57,721 dol. 20 c.

2. Destruction of goods.

2. In January 1867, when the same town was attacked by other forces and was almost completely burnt down, and Mr. Woolrich's goods stored in a Mexican's house, and premises were plundered and destroyed. Loss alleged, 112,780 dollars.

These alleged losses of goods occurred during the latter days of the Empire when the civil war was carried on in the most savage manner. I consider that these claims should be rejected under the rule laid down by M. Heinrich Geffcken:—"Pour les dommages soufferts en temps de guerre, ou de révolution, les étrangers n'ont aucun droit à des indemnités de la part de l'État où ils séjournent, ce serait réclamer pour de personnes établies dans un autre pays des avantages dont les nationaux eux-mêmes ne jouissent pas. Lorsqu'on s'établit dans un État étranger on est tenu d'en subir les conséquences." This doctrine appears to be the one accepted by the generality of nations, when a Government has not authorized the acts complained of, ~~and has not profited by the plunder~~, or by its neglect or default allowed them to be committed. These claims would be de jure against the Imperialist Government, and would, therefore, not be admitted by the Federal authorities.

3. Seizure of salt.

3. This claim is for a certain amount of salt transferred by the Imperial Government to Mr. Woolrich and to an American named Simonson. This claim was submitted by the latter to the Americo-Mexican Claims Commission, and the Arbitrator, Sir E. Thornton, decided that the Mexican authorities were justified in embargoing the salt. There appears no necessity to reopen this inquiry; and I agree with the decision arrived at by Sir Edward Thornton. Amount, 49,995 dollars.

4. Occupation and destruction of house.

4. If the statement made by Mr. Woolrich be correct, there appears to be some ground for this claim. The others are supported by no evidence. Amount, 5,650 dol. 25 c.

Murder of Vice-Consul Bodmer.

Group III. Murder of Mr. Bodmer, Vice-Consul at Tasco.—There appears to be no evidence whatever on which to substantiate any claim against the Mexican Government, though a compassionate allowance might be granted by the Mexican Government on the recommendation of the Commissioners.

Seizure of Mr. Lambley.

Group IV.—Mr. Lambley was held to ransom by a person calling himself Colonel Ugalde, and had to pay 1,300 dollars. As there is no proof that this person was other than a bandit, this claim cannot be supported. Amount paid, 1,300 dollars.

Seizure of Mr. Rabling.

2. That of Mr. Rabling appears to have more foundation, as there is some proof that Colonel Fragoso was employed by the Republican party then in arms against the Imperial Government.

Seizure of Messrs. Chabot's goods.

Group V.—Goods seized belonging to Messrs. Chabot, British merchants, whilst under convoy of French troops. ~~This may be considered a parallel case of neutral goods conveyed on board an armed belligerent vessel. The doctrine held by Sir William Scott was, that such goods were good prize. Under this rule, Messrs. Chabot have no legal claim, and in consequence it must be rejected.~~ There is no principle of international law upon which this claim can be supported.

Group VI.—Acts of the reactionary party in power. These include two cases of importance:—

Claim of T. Gillow;

1. That of T. Gillow for 16,469 dol. 76 c. T. Gillow is represented by his son, Mgr. Gillow, Bishop of Oaxaca. On it being explained to him that the Mexican Government entertained insuperable objections to admitting responsibility for the actions of those reactionary authorities who were in arms against General Juarez, he very generously withdrew his claim.

of A. W. Morphy;

2. The claim of Mr. A. W. Morphy is for money voluntarily advanced to the Head of one of the contending factions. The money was given at his own risk in the midst of civil war, and, therefore, is not of that class of claims into which the Commission was established to inquire. As Miramon's friends were in power during many after this event, Mr. Morphy had every opportunity of pressing his claim, and the system of advancing money to the Chiefs of contending parties, and then applying to Her Majesty's Government to collect the debt is not one to be encouraged or supported. It is not probable that so large a sum was really advanced, certainly not by Mr. Morphy. It is likely that he is lending his name to Mexican citizens. Amount claimed, 87,268 dol. 61 c.

and of G. Selby.

G. Selby's claim need not be supported, as he evidently brought upon himself whatever sufferings he endured.

---

* The words eliminated by the Law Officers from the original draft are printed in erased type, and those added by them are printed in italics.

1889

Claims for exactions by parties.

The claims of A. Stephenson, 3,227 dol. 50 c.; W. Duncan, 555 dollars; Grant and Mitchell, 453 dol. 25 c.; and David Morn, 4,415 dol. 56 c. may be more or less substantiated, but they are the exactions of one party, for which the opposing party now in power decline to consider themselves responsible, and cannot be considered as the acts of a Government accepted and obeyed by the people of Mexico, and by the public forces of that State.

MOROCCO.

No. 37.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received June 25.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, June 24, 1889.

Protection in Morocco of Mr. Bensaude, a naturalized British subject, born of Moorish parents in Morocco.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. H. Sanderson's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list with reference to a claim which had been put forward by Mr. David Bensaude, a naturalized British subject of Moorish origin, to British protection within the dominions of the Sultan of Morocco.

That Mr. Bensaude was born at Mogador of Moorish parents, but that he subsequently resided in England, where, after attaining his majority, he obtained a certificate of naturalization as a British subject on the 5th September, 1878.

That "The Naturalization Act, 1870," 33 & 34 Vict., cap. 14, sec. 7, provided that "an alien . . . . . shall not, when within the limits of the foreign State of which he was a subject previously to obtaining his certificate of naturalization, be deemed to be a British subject, unless he has ceased to be a subject of that State in pursuance of the laws thereof, or in pursuance of a Treaty to that effect."

That Mr. Bensaude had not, so far as was known, ceased to be a Moorish subject by virtue of any specific Municipal Law of Morocco in that regard, but that the Convention (to which Great Britain was a party) between the various European Powers and Morocco for the settlement of the rights of protection in that country, which was signed at Madrid on the 3rd July, 1880, contained a provision (see Article XV, last paragraph, of the French official text) to the following effect:—

Question as to Article XV of Treaty of 1880.

"La naturalisation étrangère acquise jusqu'à ce jour par des sujets Marocains suivant les règles établies par les lois de chaque pays, leur est maintenue pour tous ses effets, sans restriction aucune."

That the question appeared to turn upon the construction to be placed on the words "maintenue pour tous ses effets, sans restriction aucune;" and that with regard to that point it was suggested for our consideration whether those words were not to be read with reference solely to the law of the foreign State in which the particular Moorish subject concerned had become naturalized abroad, and whether, if so, they could confer any greater or further rights or privileges upon such subject than were specified by the law itself under which he was so naturalized abroad.

That in the present case it was expressly provided by the instrument under which his naturalization was effected that Mr. Bensaude should not be deemed to be a British subject in Morocco unless he had ceased to be a subject of the latter State, and that it seemed difficult to contend that the words of the Convention of the 3rd July, 1880, to which our attention had been called, had so modified his status in Moroco as to entitle him to British protection, notwithstanding the provisions of the 7th section of "The Naturalization Act, 1870."

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether Mr. Bensaude was, under the circumstances, entitled to British protection in Morocco or not

That your Lordship would be glad, at the same time, to be favoured with any general observations which he might have to offer on the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration and, in obedience to your L ship's commands, have the honour to

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received November 5.)

Royal Courts of Justice, November 2, 1889.

My Lord,

Ex-territorial jurisdiction. Draft Order in Council.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 6th July last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of an Order in Council,[*] to be cited as "The Morocco Order in Council, 1889," which had been prepared by Mr. R. S. Wright, under your Lordship's instructions, for the purpose of further regulating the exercise of Her Majesty's ex-territorial jurisdiction within the dominions of the Sultan of Morocco and Fez.

That Her Majesty's power and jurisdiction in Morocco were at present exercised under the provisions of the two Orders in Council dated respectively the 27th August, 1857, and the 4th February, 1875, of which copies were inclosed.

Proposed repeal of former Orders.

That it was now proposed to repeal those Orders, and to substitute therefor an Order—in the terms of the accompanying draft—which was of a much more comprehensive nature, and contained—mutatis mutandis—all the various general provisions which had been inserted in the other Orders in Council lately issued under the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts, 1843 to 1878.

That it was believed that the proposed Order in Council contained no provisions which were without precedent in other similar legislation, and that its terms had already been considered and approved by the Home and Colonial Offices, and by the Treasury, in so far as those Departments were respectively concerned.

That it had been thought well, however, in case we should desire to refer to them, to inclose all the communications and correspondence which had passed upon the subject whilst the draft was in course of preparation.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the draft Order, and the other papers transmitted therewith, into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether its terms were right and proper to be submitted to the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

Concurrent jurisdiction at Tangier.

We have also the honour to acknowledge the receipt of a Memorandum from Sir Thomas Sanderson, dated the 18th September last, inclosing certain correspondence relative to the proposed insertion in the draft Order of provisions for the establishment of concurrent jurisdiction at Tangier of the Vice-Admiralty Court of Gibraltar, and requesting that the further papers might be taken into consideration with those already submitted.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Approve draft Order.

That, in our opinion, the draft Order, as altered and initialled by us, may properly be submitted to the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

We have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received March 5.)

[After quoting the terms of the reference printed below, dated the 28th February, 1889, they report as on page 75:—]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, February 28, 1889.

Gentlemen,

Interpretation of Treaty of Managua of Jan. 28, 1860.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Secretary of State, the papers noted in the accompanying list,* which relate to the interpretation to be given to certain provisions of the Treaty between Nicaragua and Great Britain, signed at Managua on the 28th January, 1860.

Complaint of Chief of Mosquito Indians against Nicaragua. Request for intervention of H. M.'s Govt.

In July last the Chief of the Mosquito Indians, with whose interests and territory the Treaty of Managua deals, made complaint to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs regarding certain proceedings of the authorities of the Nicaraguan Government, and requested the intervention of Her Majesty's Government as a party to the Treaty of Managua to see that its provisions should be strictly adhered to.

Arbitration of Emperor of Austria.

In consequence of a conflict of views as to the proper interpretation of certain Articles of that Treaty, Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Nicaragua agreed, in the year 1879, to refer the points at issue to the arbitration of the Emperor of Austria. His Majesty gave his Award on the 2nd July, 1881.

His Award.

For the purposes of the present reference to you, it is sufficient to quote the Articles of the Treaty concerning which issues are now raised, and to state the interpretation given to them by the Award of the Emperor of Austria.

Article I says:—

"On exchanging the ratifications of the present Treaty Her Britannic Majesty, subject to the conditions and engagements specified therein, and without prejudice to any question of boundary between the Republics of Nicaragua and Honduras, will recognize as belonging to and under the sovereignty of the Republic of Nicaragua the country hitherto occupied or claimed by the Mosquito Indians within the frontier of that Republic, whatever that frontier may be.

"The British Protectorate of that part of the Mosquito Territory shall cease three months after the exchange of the ratifications of the present Treaty, in order to enable Her Majesty's Government to give the necessary instructions for carrying out the stipulations of said Treaty."

Article II is as follows:—

"A district within the territory of the Republic of Nicaragua shall be assigned to the Mosquito Indians, which district shall remain, as above stipulated, under the sovereignty of the Republic of Nicaragua.

"Such district shall be comprised in a line which shall begin at the mouth of the River Rama in the Caribbean Sea; thence it shall run up the midcourse of that river to its source, and from such source proceed in a line due west to the meridian of 84° 15′ longitude west from Greenwich; thence due north up the said meridian until it strikes the River Hueso, and down the midcourse of that river to its mouth in the sea, as laid down in Baily's Map, at about latitude from 14° to 15° north, and longitude 83° west from the meridian of Greenwich, and thence southerly along the shore of the Caribbean Sea to the mouth of the River Rama, the point of commencement.

"But the district thus assigned to the Mosquito Indians may not be ceded by them to any foreign person or State, but shall be and remain under the sovereignty of the Republic of Nicaragua."

Article III states:—

"The Mosquito Indians, within the district designated in the preceding Article, shall enjoy the right of governing according to their own customs, and according to any regulations which may from time to time be adopted by them, not inconsistent with the sovereign rights of the Republic of Nicaragua, themselves, and all persons residing within such district. Subject to the above-mentioned reserve, the Republic of Nicaragua agrees to respect and not to interfere with such customs and regulations so established, or to be established, within the said district."

Article IV says:—

"It is understood, however, that nothing in this Treaty shall be construed to prevent the Mosquito Indians, at any future time, from agreeing to absolute incorporation into the Republic of Nicaragua on the same footing as other citizens of the Republic, and from subjecting themselves to be governed by the general laws and regulations of the Republic, instead of by their own customs and regulations."

The following are the decisions of the Emperor of Austria in regard to the above-mentioned Articles:—

"1. The sovereignty of the Republic of Nicaragua which was recognized by Articles I and II of the Treaty of Managua of the 28th January, 1860, is not full and unlimited with regard to the territory assigned to the Mosquito Indians, but is limited by the self-government conceded to the Mosquito Indians in Article III of this Treaty.

"2. The Republic of Nicaragua, as a mark of its sovereignty, is entitled to hoist the flag of the Republic throughout the territory assigned to the Mosquito Indians.

"3. The Republic of Nicaragua is entitled to appoint a Commissioner for the protection of its sovereign rights throughout the territory assigned to the Mosquito Indians.

"4. The Mosquito Indians are also to be allowed to hoist their flag henceforward, but they must at the same time attach to it some emblem of the sovereignty of the Republic of Nicaragua.

"5. The Republic of Nicaragua is not entitled to grant Concessions for the acquisition of natural products in the territory assigned to the Mosquito Indians. That right belongs to the Mosquito Government.

"6. The Republic of Nicaragua is not entitled to regulate the trade of the Mosquito Indians, or to levy duties on goods imported into or exported from the territory reserved to the Mosquito Indians. That right belongs to the Mosquito Indians."

Legal opinion attached to Award.

The Award of the Emperor of Austria did not specifically refer to the rights of Great Britain under the Treaty of Managua, which is the point now in question, but the legal opinion attached to the Award, and on which it is based, states (p. 29, Parliamentary Paper, "Nicaragua No. 1, 1881"):—

"In regard, however, to the affairs of the Mosquito Indians, it is true that England, in the Treaty of Managua, has acknowledged the sovereignty of Nicaragua, and renounced the Protectorate, but this still only on condition, set forth in the Treaty, of certain political and pecuniary advantages for the Mosquitos ('subject to the conditions and engagements specified in the Treaty, Article I'). England has an interest of its own in the fulfilment of these conditions stipulated in favour of those who were formerly under its protection, and, therefore, also a right of its own to insist upon the fulfilment of those promises, as well as of all other clauses of the Treaty. The Government of Nicaragua is wrong in calling this an inadmissible 'intervention,' inasmuch as pressing for the fulfilment of engagements undertaken by Treaty on the part of a foreign State is not to be classified as intermeddling with the internal affairs of that State, which intermeddling has unquestionably been prohibited under penalty. No less unjustly does the Government of Nicaragua seek to qualify this insistance on Treaty claims as a continued exercise of the relinquished Protectorate, and on that ground wish to declare England's interposition inadmissible."

The legal Report or opinion goes on, and concludes as follows:—

"Finally, the Government of the Republic of Nicaragua also expresses the desire that the Award should declare that the Treaty of Managua, as having accomplished its purpose, is annulled in respect to Mosquitia, and that in future the parties concerned are bound in this respect to comply solely with the decisions adopted and enumerated in the Award. This desire militates against universal principles of law, and, therefore, cannot be acceded to. The interpretation of a Treaty can never supersede the Treaty interpreted, and the judicial decision creates no new right, but only affirms and establishes the existing right."

Instruction to Mr. Gastrell.

In consequence of the representations from the Chief of the Mosquito Indians referred to at the beginning of the present letter, Her Majesty's Minister accredited to the Republic of Nicaragua was on the 4th August last instructed to draw the attention of the Nicaraguan Government to the wording of the Treaty of Managua, and to the interpretation given to it by the Award of the Emperor of Austria.

Mr. Gastrell was directed to remind the Nicaraguan Government of the provisions of the Treaty in regard to the boundaries of the Mosquito Reservation. He was also instucted to point out to that Government that the erection of forts, arsenals, or military posts, the establishment of Nicaraguan post-offices, the exercise of military or police authority by Nicaragua within the territory of the Reserve, would be inconsistent with the spirit of the Treaty of Managua as interpreted by the Arbitrator's Award.

The despatch to Mr. Gastrell, just described, recites the representations received from the Chief of the Mosquito Indians whereon the instructions given to Mr. Gastrell were based, and is transmitted herewith for your information.

Interference of the U.S.A.

On the 4th December last the United States' Minister at this Court forwarded to the Marquis of Salisbury a copy of a despatch (herein inclosed) which he had received from the United States' Secretary of State respecting the note which, in consequence of the instructions given by his Lordship to Mr. Gastrell in August last, that gentleman had addressed to to the Nicaraguan Minister for Foreign Affairs.

Appeal to Clayton-Bulwer Treaty of 1850.

Mr. Bayard prefaces his remarks on the matters to which he particularly desires to call attention by a review of the circumstances which led to the conclusion of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty in 1850, and of the Convention between Great Britain and Nicaragua of 1860, and he observes that the latter Treaty was officially communicated to the Government of the United States, which, regarding it as a final withdrawal of British influence from the Mosquito country, expressed its satisfaction at a settlement that appeared to put an end to the disputes to which the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty had given rise. Mr. Bayard, however, after alluding to the differences between the Governments of Great Britain and Nicaragua as to the interpretation of the Treaty, and to the consequent reference of those differences to the arbitration of the Emperor of Austria, states that the United States' Government, not having been a party to this agreement of arbitration, "is not bound by the Award of the Arbitrator, nor committed in any way to an admission of the right of Great Britain to interfere in disputes between the Republic of Nicaragua and the Indians living within her borders," and he entirely dissents from the view as to Great Britain's rights of intervention expressed in the opinion or Report upon which the Award is based. Mr. Bayard further contends that "the stipulations of the Treaty of Managua relative to the privileges to be accorded to the Mosquito Indians were not for the benefit of Great Britain," and "are not enforceable by her." "They were," he says, "solely made for the benefit of those Indians who were regarded by the express language of the Treaty* as at liberty to accept or reject its stipulations. Through their Chief they did deliberately accept them, and on the withdrawal of British protection placed themselves under the sovereign power of the Republic of Nicaragua, and agreed to accept her public pledges as a sufficient guarantee that the agreements therein contained touching their right of self-government would be carried out in good faith," and thereupon the right of Great Britain to interfere was at an end; and he states that "the President cannot but regard the continued exercise of the claim on the part of Great Britain to interfere on behalf of these Indians as the assertion of a British Protectorate in another form, more especially when this effort is directed to prohibiting Nicaragua from exercising military jurisdiction in the immediate neighbourhood of the Atlantic mouth of the projected canal," and he says that "the course of Great Britain in assuming or exercising any dominion over the Mosquito Coast, or making use of any protection it may afford, or any alliance it may have to or with any people, for the purpose of assuming or exercising any dominion over that territory, would be a violation of the express stipulations of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty."

On this point I am to refer you to the Ist Article of that Treaty, hereto annexed.

Mr. Bayard, apart from the consideration of the correctness of the Emperor's Award, holds that there is nothing in it or in the Treaty incompatible with the right of Nicaragua to establish post-offices, or to establish military posts for the common defence. Such a right is, he maintains, an essential incident of paramount sovereignty, and can properly be exercised by no other agency, and "it seems idle," he says, "to speak of a Government having the right to hoist a flag as the emblem of a sovereignty which it is not to be permitted to defend."

---

* Vide Article VI:—

"Her Britannic Majesty engages to use her good offices with the Chief of the Mosquito Indians, so that he shall accept the stipulations which are contained in this Convention."

Mr. Bayard also points out that "to the United States, in common with all other Powers, it is important that Nicaraguan sovereignty should exist in fact as well as name within the Mosquito Reservation. With the Sovereign alone," he says, "can we maintain diplomatic relations, and we have a right to look to that Sovereign for redress in the event of wrongs being inflicted upon any of our citizens. If the Republic of Nicaragua is to be limited to the mere formal right of hoisting a flag and maintaining a Commissioner within the Reservation, how can it be called upon to perform any of its international obligations?"

Proposed reply to U. S. Govt.

The Marquis of Salisbury proposes to reply to Mr. Bayard's despatch by pointing out—

1. That the Award of the Emperor, to which the United States' Government take exception, was given more than seven years ago, and that no objection has till now been made to it by that Government.

2. That if the object contemplated by Her Majesty's Government had been an unconditional withdrawal of the Protectorate of Great Britain, no Convention would have been required or made; but that Nicaragua entered into a distinct Treaty arrangement with Great Britain to secure certain rights and privileges to the Mosquito Indians as soon as the British Protectorate should be withdrawn, and in the event—which has arisen—of the Mosquito Indians complaining that their rights are infringed by Nicaragua, Her Majesty's Government feel themselves in duty bound to bring the matter to the notice of the Nicaraguan Government.

Lord Salisbury proposes, however, to say that Mr. Bayard is under a misapprehension as to the extent of the intervention exercised by Her Majesty's Government, and that they do not claim "to intervene in every dispute between the Mosquito Indians and their Sovereign," but only within the limits of the Report annexed to the Emperor of Austria's Award quoted by Mr. Bayard. His Lordship proposes also to state that Her Majesty's Government have no desire to "assert a Protectorate" in substance or in form, or anything in the nature of a Protectorate, and to say that it would give them the greatest possible satisfaction if the Nicaraguan Government and the Indians would come to an amicable arrangement under Article IV of the Convention, and thus relieve this country from any further responsibility in regard to their affairs.

I inclose the draft of the proposed reply, and I am directed by Lord Salisbury to request that you will take all the papers herewith transmitted into your consideration, and that you will favour his Lordship with any suggestions that you may have to make in regard to the terms of the draft reply, and with your observations on such of the questions raised by Mr. Bayard as you may consider worthy of notice.

I am, &c.

Annex.

Draft of Despatch from the Marquis of Salisbury to Her Majesty's Representative at Washington.

(No. .)

Foreign Office, March , 1889.

Sir,

ON the 4th December last the United States' Minister at this Court transmitted to me a copy of a despatch which he had received from the Secretary of State respecting the Mosquito Reservation.

In that despatch, of which a copy is inclosed herein,* Mr. Bayard draws attention to a note addressed by my direction to the Nicaraguan Minister for Foreign Affairs on the 10th September last, by Mr. Gastrell, Her Majesty's Minister accredited to the Republics of Central America.

Owing to a complaint made to Her Majesty's Government by the Chief of the Mosquito Reserve in regard to certain proceedings on the part of Nicaraguan authorities which he deemed to be inconsistent with the provisions of the Treaty of Managua of 1860, I had instructed Mr. Gastrell to make a friendly remonstrance to the Government of Nicaragua, and to draw their attention to the wording of the Treaty, and to the interpretation given to it by the Award of the Emperor of Austria.

For your information, I inclose a copy of my instructions to Mr. Gastrell.†

Mr. Bayard prefaces his remarks on the matters to which he particularly desires to call attention by a brief historical review of the circumstances which led to the conclusion of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty and of the Convention between Great Britain and Nicaragua of 1860; but he observes that the latter was officially communicated to the Government of the United States, which, regarding it as a final withdrawal of British influence from the Mosquito country, expressed its satisfaction at a settlement that appeared to put an end to the disputes to which the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty had given rise.

I am therefore not called upon here to discuss any question other than the respective rights and duties of Great Britain and Nicaragua under the Convention referred to.

As Mr. Bayard observes, "differences arose between the Governments of Great Britain and Nicaragua in relation to the free port of Greytown, the payment of the annuity to the Mosquito Indians, and the precise extent of the rights of Nicaragua within the Indian Reservation. By an exchange of diplomatic notes between the Representatives of Great Britain and Nicaragua it was agreed that all of these questions should be submitted to the arbitration of the Emperor of Austria," whose decision was announced in July 1881.

Mr. Bayard, however, states that the United States' Government, not being a party to this agreement of arbitration, "is not bound by the Award of the Arbitrator, nor committed in any way to an admission of the right of Great Britain to interfere in disputes between the Republic of Nicaragua and the Indians living within her borders." And he entirely dissents from the view as to Great Britain's rights of intervention expressed in the opinion or Report upon which the Award is based.

Mr. Bayard contends that "the stipulations of the Treaty of Managua relative to the privileges to be accorded to the Mosquito Indians were not for the benefit of Great Britain, and "are not enforceable by her," and he states that "the President cannot but regard the continued exercise of the claim on the part of Great Britain to interfere on behalf of these Indians as the assertion of a British Protectorate in another form."

I may remark that the Award of the Emperor was given more than seven years ago, and no objection has till now been made to it by the United States' Government.

If the object contemplated by Her Majesty's Government had been an unconditional withdrawal of the Protectorate of Great Britain, no Convention would have been required or made; but Nicaragua entered into a distinct Treaty arrangement with this country to secure certain rights and privileges to the Mosquito Indians as soon as the British Protectorate should be withdrawn; and in the event, which has arisen, of the Mosquito Indians complaining that their rights are infringed by Nicaragua, by whom is remonstrance to be made to Nicaragua unless by Great Britain, with whom she has concluded the Convention in question?

Mr. Bayard quotes as analogous to the present issue the Treaties between the United States and France, Spain, and Russia for the cession respectively to the United States of Louisiana, Florida, and Alaska, and he states that although difficulties have at times arisen between the Federal Government and the inhabitants of Louisiana and Florida, neither France nor Spain ever pretended that the Treaty stipulations gave them a right to take part in the settlement of such disputes, and that were the Indians of Alaska to protest against alleged discriminations between the laws governing that Territory and the other Territories of the United States, the Emperor of Russia would not be authorized by the Treaty of 1867 to demand a different treatment of those Indians. Mr. Bayard does not, however, say whether such intervention was, as in the present case, invoked by the inhabitants concerned, or whether the differences to which he refers were of a kind provided for in the Treaties which he mentions.

---

* Inclosure in Mr. Phelps' note of December 4, 1888.

† To Mr. Gastrell, No. 37, August 4, 1888.

Certain advantages were, by the Convention of 1860, secured to the Indians of the Mosquito Reserve, and Her Majesty's Government felt themselves in duty bound to bring to the notice of the Nicaraguan Government the cases specified in Mr. Gastrell's note. Mr. Bayard is, however, under a misapprehension as to the extent of the intervention exercised by Her Majesty's Government. They do not claim "to intervene in every dispute between the Mosquito Indians and their Sovereign," but only within the limits of the Report annexed to the Emperor of Austria's Award quoted by Mr. Bayard.

They have no desire to "assert a Protectorate" in substance or in form, or anything in the nature of a Protectorate, and it would give them the greatest possible satisfaction if the Nicaraguan Government and the Indians would come to an amicable arrangement under Article IV of the Convention, and thus relieve this country from any further responsibility in regard to their affairs.

I have to request that you will read this despatch to the Secretary of State, and leave a copy of it with him, and you may inform him that I have recently received from the Nicaraguan Minister at this Court a note giving explanations in reply to the representations made in Mr. Gastrell's note of the 10th September last.

I am, &c.

PACIFIC ISLANDS.

No. 40.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received February 26.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, February 23, 1889.

Issue of licences to work unclaimed guano islands.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. Villiers Lister's letter of the 12th December last, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by your Lordship's direction, and in connection with our Report to your Lordship of the 10th April last* upon the same subject, a letter (and inclosures) which had been received from the Colonial Office† with reference to the form of licence granting to British subjects the right to work guano or other fertilizing substances in certain uninhabited islands situated chiefly in the Western Pacific Ocean.

Proposed alterations in forms of letters patent and licences.

That it would be seen that Lord Knutsford had proposed certain alterations (which were shown in italics in Inclosures Nos. 1, 2, and 3 respectively of the Colonial Office letter above referred to) in the original forms of letters patent and licences which had been in use up to the present time, in order to meet the cases not only of islands of which possession had already been taken at the date of the licence, but also cases in which possession, though then contemplated, had not actually taken place.

That other suggestions were also made with reference to the forms of the letters patent to be issued to the Governor of New South Wales, and to the High Commissioner of the Western Pacific, as well as of the warrant to the Secretary of State for the Colonies; and that certain alterations which were proposed in those documents would also be found indicated in italics in Inclosures Nos. 2 and 3 of the Colonial Office letter.

Licences for islands within and for those without British dominions. Distinction between.

That having regard to the fact that the grant of such leases in the case of islands already forming part of Her Majesty's dominions was a matter which did not, strictly speaking, concern the Foreign Office at all, but fell exclusively within the province of the Colonial Office, it had been suggested as preferable that the instruments authorizing such leases should be separate and distinct from those under which leases of islands not belonging, at the moment of the grant, either to Great Britain or any other civilized Power, were proposed to be effected by Her Majesty's Government.

That it was with the latter class of leases alone that the Foreign Office was concerned, and that the more convenient and simple course would, therefore, appear to be to issue letters patent under a separate form which should be applicable to those cases only.

---

* Confidential No. 5785, p. 50.

† August 2, 1888. [1504 e.] Confidential No. 5784, p. 23.

Forms (A) and (B) of letters patent.

That a form of letters patent (marked A) had accordingly been prepared, authorizing the Governor of New South Wales in all cases to grant leases of islands and places in the North and South Pacific Oceans not being within the jurisdiction of any civilized Power, and that the present form of licence had also been amended (as to which we were referred to document B) to meet the requirements of the case.

That those forms had been submitted for the approval of the Colonial Office, and that, subject to any alterations which our Report on the various other questions raised in their letter of the 2nd August might render necessary, had been accepted by that Department.

That at present the High Commissioner for the Western Pacific granted leases within certain geographical limits, and that the Governor of New South Wales acted in a similar capacity in regard to places in the Western Pacific beyond those geographical limits.

Governor of New South Wales to be sole issuer of licences.

That it was not proposed to displace the authority of the Governor of New South Wales as at present established in that regard, but that it had been suggested that it might, perhaps, be preferable to enlarge it, and to make him the sole issuer of licences to the supersession of the High Commissioner, as the latter was not nearly as accessible, being resident in Fiji, to persons desiring licences as the Governor was in New South Wales.

As to retention of recitals.

That it appeared, moreover, worthy of consideration whether all recitals (with the exception of a general one to the effect that the proposed licencee had applied for, and Her Majesty had been pleased to grant, a licence on the terms and conditions thereinafter contained) should not, at all events in that particular class of cases, be omitted in the forms of licence issued.

Proposed Order in Council as to jurisdiction of Australasian Courts.

That it was also pointed out in the Colonial Office letter of the 2nd August that practical difficulties were likely to arise in the application of the provisions of "The British Settlements Act, 1887," to those islands, and that it was suggested for our consideration and report whether they might not possibly be overcome by the issue of an Order in Council conferring jurisdiction generally upon the Courts of all the Colonies of Australasia in respect of offences committed on those islands, and thus rendering the offender justiciable wherever he might be found.

Previous mortgage a bar to issue of licence.

That Sir T. V. Lister was further to inquire whether, in our opinion, the fact that an applicant for a licence had previously mortgaged his property and interest in the island in question should be regarded as an objection to the issue of the licence; and that, in connection with that inquiry, he was to call our attention to the circumstance that there was in the licence a recital on the part of the licencee that no other person had, or claimed to have, on the ground of prior discovery, or otherwise, any right or interest to or in the said island, and a covenant that the licencee would not assign the licence, or any interest therein, without first obtaining the consent of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, or of the Governor of New South Wales.

That the papers which accompanied the reference from your Lordship's Department to ourselves of the 3rd March* last were inclosed for convenience of reference.

That Sir T. V. Lister was to request that we would take the Colonial Office letter of the 2nd August, and the several draft instruments and other papers transmitted with his letter, into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the various questions involved, and with any observations which we might have to offer generally upon the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Report—

Issue of letters patent by Foreign Office.

That, in our opinion, it is advisable that, in the event of letters patent being issued authorizing licences as to islands not already within the dominions of the Crown, such letters patent should be issued separately and by the Foreign Office.

Issue of licences by Governor.

We see no objection to the supersession of the High Commissioner in respect of the issuing of these licences.

Recitals to be retained.

The recitals contained in the forms of licence are appropriate and should not be omitted. It may be important to have a clear statement of the conditions upon which a licence has been granted.

Approve Order in Council as to jurisdiction.

We are of opinion that an Order in Council may properly be issued conferring general jurisdiction upon the Courts of the Australasian Colonies in respect of offences committed in the islands adjacent thereto.

Previous mortgage a bar to licence.

Mistake in Form (B).

Alterations as to labour regulations.

Approve forms as altered.

We are of opinion that no licence should be granted when the applicant has previously mortgaged his holding and interest in the island. Such a case is, in our judgment, properly excluded by the language of the second paragraph of the licence (B). We note that in this indenture the marginal titles are misplaced, and we have made the necessary correction. There is, moreover, an important matter which arises upon the third covenant on the part of the licencee. As framed, it might permit enforced labour and punishment, unless the Secretary of State had made an express prohibition: this clause must be altered. We should propose simply to excise the words struck through in black ink so as to make the prohibition absolute, but if there are likely to be any cases in which regulations as to labour may have to be made, the words underlined in red ink (printed in italics) can be inserted, but the prudence of inserting them must be carefully considered. Subject to this alteration, and the addition to the clause dealing with the termination of the licence [printed in brackets], we approve the forms submitted for our consideration.

We have, &c.

Power of High Commissioner of Western Pacific to deal with or quash decisions of a Deputy Commissioner.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, August 12, 1889.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Robert Herbert's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a copy of a despatch from Sir John Thurston, K.C.M.G., the High Commissioner for the Western Pacific (with its inclosures),* reporting the circumstances in which he had quashed the decision of the Deputy Commissioner in Samoa in the case of an action for libel brought by the German Consul against the proprietor of the "Samoan Times," and also a copy of a further despatch from Sir John Thurston reporting that he had quashed the Deputy Commissioner's decision in a second case, and requesting to be instructed whether, in the absence of any express provision in that behalf in the Western Pacific Orders in Council, he had, as he had been advised, the inherent jurisdiction, as High Commissioner, to control and rectify the actions of the inferior Tribunals acting under the Western Pacific Orders in Council.

That Sir Robert Herbert was to request that we would inform your Lordship whether we were of opinion that Sir John Thurston's action in the case of the Imperial German Consul v. Cusack, and in the further case referred to, was within his competence as High Commissioner, and generally whether he had the power to deal with the decisions of the Deputy Commissioners.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

He is not competent to quash a conviction.

That, in our opinion, the power of the High Commissioner to deal with convictions and sentences pronounced or inflicted by a Deputy Commissioner is limited by the Orders in Council to the mitigation or remission of punishment, and it is not competent for him to quash a conviction.

Persia (Inland) Order in Council.

Draft of for approval.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, June 28, 1889.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. H. Sanderson's letter of the 7th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying draft of an Order in Council to be known as "The Persia Order in Council, 1889," which had been prepared by Mr. R. S. Wright under instructions from the Foreign Office for the purpose of providing for the exercise of Her Majesty's exterritorial jurisdiction within the inland dominions (as defined in that Order) of His Majesty the Shah of Persia.

That another draft Order in Council* which was then under the consideration of the Secretary of State for India in Council in communication with the Foreign Office, and would shortly be submitted to us for approval, had been prepared by Mr. R. S. Wright, with the view of providing for the exercise of similar jurisdiction on the part of Her Majesty with regard to the coasts and islands of the Shah's dominions and territories.

That the ports and coasts of Persia with their adjacent islands were in close relation with the British-Indian Empire, and that it was therefore considered desirable that the law and procedure of British India should be applied to them.

But that between inland Persia and British India no such relation existed, and that it had been considered preferable to apply there a system similar to that in force in the Levant under the Ottoman Orders in Council, which had been found to work well in practice.

That the present draft closely followed the Ottoman Orders, although a few necessary modifications had been made, and some more modern clauses, the terms of which had been approved in other recent drafts of Orders in Council, had also been added.

That Sir T. H. Sanderson was to request that we would take the draft Order and the other papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether it might properly be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Report—

Approve draft as altered.

That, in our opinion, the draft Order as amended and initialled by us may properly be laid before Her Majesty in Council, for Her Majesty's approval.†

My Lord,

Persian Coast and Islands Order in Council. Draft of, for approval.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. H. Sanderson's letter of the 20th ultimo, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 7th of last month, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying draft of an Order in Council, to be known as "The Persia Coast and Islands Order in Council, 1889,"* which had been prepared by Mr. R. S. Wright under instructions from the Foreign Office for providing for the exercise of Her Majesty's exterritorial jurisdiction in that portion of the coast and islands of the Persian Gulf and Gulf of Oman which was within the dominions of the Shah of Persia, a matter which, for the reasons stated in Sir T. H. Sanderson's letter of the 7th ultimo, it was thought desirable should be regulated by a separate Order in Council.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to inclose a letter from the India Office,† stating that Viscount Cross had no objection to the draft as it then stood; and that he was to request that we would take that draft into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether it might properly be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval, and with any general observations which we might have to offer.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received December 6.)

Royal Courts of Justice, December 5, 1889.

My Lord,

Persian Investment Corporation for conducting lottery loans, &c.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, a copy of the prospectus of the Persian Investment Corporation (Limited), together with the decyphers of three telegrams bearing upon its subject, and dated respectively the 25th, 26th, and 30th November last, which had been received from Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran.

Status of Corporation.

That it would be seen from the prospectus that most of the Directors of the Persian Investment Corporation were British subjects, and that the Company possessed an office in London; while, as appeared from paragraphs 2 et seq., the principal object of the Corporation was to acquire and work a Concession granted by His Imperial Majesty the Shah of Persia, and dated the 20th July, 1889, conferring, for the period of seventy-five years, the exclusive privilege of conducting all operations in connection with lottery loans and other similar issues in Persia during the term of the Concession.

That it was believed that that Concession was, in the first instance, vested in a Mr. Cloeté; that it appeared subsequently to have been acquired from him by a Company entitled the Anglo-Asiatic Syndicate (Limited), of which a prospectus (anonymous) was also inclosed; and that, finally, the Concession seemed to have been transferred, through the medium of one Buzie de Caerdoel, to the Persian Investment Corporation.

Objections to scheme.

That Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran was of opinion that a scheme of the kind in question would, if carried out, be seriously detrimental to the interests of Persia, and had applied for instructions as to the legal position of the Corporation in so far as it might be amenable to English law, and also with regard to the liabilities of British subjects taking part in such an enterprise as was defined in the prospectus, whether as Directors or shareholders.

* For Order in Council as issued, see Confidential No. 5865*.

† India Office, May 8, 1889.

Questions as to—

That Sir Philip Currie was therefore to request that we would take that prospectus and the other papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to—

1. Legality and liability of Corporation; 2. Liability of Directors;

1. Whether the objects of the Corporation as defined by the prospectus were in any, and, if so, what, respects illegal and punishable in English law.

2. Whether persons taking part, either as promoters or Directors, in the issue of such a Company in England for the establishment of a lottery abroad were punishable under the Lottery Acts, or whether they were indictable for a conspiracy at common law against public morality or in fraud of the public, or whether they were otherwise punishable, and how.

3. Enforcement of subscriptions;

3. Whether an action would lie at the suit of the Corporation to recover the balance of moneys subscribed, but not paid up, by shareholders to whom an allotment had been made under the terms of the prospectus.

4. Recovery of subscriptions.

4. Whether an action would lie by such shareholders to recover moneys already paid to the Corporation in respect of their shares, or whether, having regard to the terms of the prospectus, they might not be considered to stand in pari delicto with the promoters or Directors.

That your Lordship would also be glad, at the same time, to be favoured with any general observations which we might desire to offer upon the matter.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Corporation liable for "keeping a lottery."

That, in our opinion, it is very doubtful whether criminal proceedings against the persons responsible for the issuing of this prospectus would be successful. We, however, think it clear that the undertaking is within the mischief contemplated by the Laws relating to lotteries and gaming, and that persons receiving moneys for the purposes of this Company are in fact keeping a lottery within the meaning of those Statutes.

Secretary should be informed of illegality of Company, and liability of Directors, &c.

We advise that the Public Prosecutor should be instructed to write to the Secretary of the Company, saying that Her Majesty's Government are advised that the enterprise is unlawful, and that, if continued, the Directors and Secretary and other persons engaged therein will render themselves liable to proceedings; and that Sir H. Drummond Wolff should be informed of the sending of such letter.

Enforcement of subscriptions, and their recovery.

Assuming the undertaking to be unlawful, the Company cannot enforce the payment for shares subscribed, and shareholders who have already paid moneys could obtain the return of such moneys, or, at all events, prevent the Company from continuing its operations in respect of lotteries.

We have, &c.

EDWARD CLARKE.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received January 26.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, January 25, 1889.

"Padron" case. Alleged breach of Customs Regulations, &c. Claim of the Pacific Steam Navigation Company (Limited) for losses incurred through proceedings of Peruvian authorities.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 16th November last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list with reference to the claim of the Pacific Steam Navigation Company (Limited) to be indemnified by the Peruvian Government in respect of losses sustained by that Company in consequence of certain alleged illegal proceedings and exactions on the part of the Peruvian authorities in relation to what might be shortly termed the "Padron" case.

That the nature and history of those claims would be found set out in the Statement of the case which had, at your Lordship's suggestion, been prepared by Messrs. Bateson, Bright, and Warr, the solicitors to the Company, while copies and translations of the more material documents referred to in support of the Company's contention were collected in the Annex to that Statement.

That the grounds upon which the Company submitted that they were entitled to the intervention of Her Majesty's Government were given at pp. 10 and 11 of the Statement, and were preceded by a short Memorandum as to the amount of compensation which the Company considered to be due to them, and which, as would be seen, they themselves assessed at 94,521*l.*

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether (1) the Company were entitled to the diplomatic intervention of Her Majesty's Government on all or any of the grounds suggested in their Statement, and (should our answer to that question be in the affirmative) (2) to what amount the pecuniary claim put forward by the Company might properly be supported by Her Majesty's Government.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Cannot express final opinion without further information.

That, without further information, we could not express any final opinion as to whether the servants of the Pacific Steam Navigation Company were guilty of any breach of the Commercial Code or Customs Regulations, though it seems very probable that some irregularities had been committed. But whatever may have been the exact state of affairs, or the particular penalties to which the Company became liable, the goods were, with the knowledge of the authorities, returned—the 119 packages to the "Onward," and the 50 to the "Naiad." Subsequently some proceedings were taken which terminated in favour of the Company, and thereafter a long interval elapsed.

Proceedings of Peruvian Government which justify remonstrance.

In our opinion, the action of the Government in afterwards instituting a suit for confiscation was unjustified and oppressive. Upon the proceeding in that suit, and especially on the decision of the Court allowing it to proceed notwithstanding the delay of fifteen months, we express no opinion; these matters were entirely within the competence of the Courts. But we think that to fix an arbitrary amount as the value of the packages, and treat them as confiscated when they had, in fact, been returned to the ships from which they came, was a course of proceeding so arbitrary and oppressive as to justify remonstrance.

To what extent Her Majesty's Government may interfere on behalf of the Company.

We are therefore of opinion that the Company may properly receive the diplomatic assistance of Her Majesty's Government in obtaining from the Peruvian Government a repayment of the amount so exacted, viz., 13,250 soles, or 2,000*l.*

Her Majesty's Government should decline to interfere in, or be in any way mixed up with, the claim suggested at p. 10 of the Memorandum of Messrs. Bateson, Bright, and Warr, which rests entirely on different considerations.

We have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received February 15.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, February 13, 1889.

Seizure of the "Overdale" and "Kirkloch" in 1884 for breach of order closing Port of Mollendo.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the seizure of the British vessels "Kirkloch" and "Overdale" in the autumn of 1884 by the Peruvian authorities at the port of Mollendo.

That the seizures of those vessels had formed the subject of several Reports by the Law Officers of the Crown in 1885, of which, for convenience of reference, copies were inclosed, with the papers which had accompanied them, as noted in the margin.

That it would, however, probably be convenient for the present purpose shortly to recapitulate the circumstances of the two cases, which might be concisely stated as follows:—

That the "Kirkloch" cleared from Newcastle for the Peruvian port of Mollendo on the 20th September, 1884, with a cargo of coals for the Arequipa Railway

1889

Company, her clearance papers being signed by the Chilean Consul acting for Peru, and that she arrived at Mollendo on the evening of the 8th January, 1885, not having called at any intermediate port after her departure from England.

That the port of Mollendo was at the time in possession of forces in rebellion against the Peruvian Government, which, by Decree actually dated the 22nd August, but only communicated to the Consular Body at Mollendo early in September, had declared it as closed to commerce.

That the right thus claimed to close a port to commerce by Municipal Decree was disputed by Her Majesty's Government, who maintained that the port being in possession of the rebels could, according to international law, only be closed by an efficient blockade.

That that position, as would be seen from the annexed series of Law Officers' Reports, to which our especial attention was requested, had been consistently maintained during and ever since the American Civil War by successive Governments of Her Majesty acting under the advice of the Law Officers of the Crown for the time being.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was also to call our attention to Wheaton's International Law by Dana, note 239 to section 523, on "Municipal Surveillance," and Lord John Russell's despatch to Lord Lyons of the 19th July, 1861, therein referred to and itself founded on the inclosed Report of the Law Officers of the Crown of the 25th June, 1861.

That the "Kirkloch" arrived off the port in ignorance of the Decree, and anchored without opposition. That the next morning the Captain of the Port, in the service of the rebels, came on board and offered all facilities for the discharge of the cargo. That it was not until later that the master of the vessel, on going ashore, first heard of the existence of the Decree.

That there was no blockade of the port, but that the Peruvian guardacosta, "Santa Rosa," charged with the execution of the Decree, appeared on the following day (the 10th January), and ordered the "Kirkloch" to sea. That the order was at once obeyed, the vessel being unmoored and hauled out to the buoys, where, however, she was compelled to remain till the next day for want of wind.

That during the time the vessel was in port no attempt was made to discharge the cargo, and that on the morning of the 11th January, there being sufficient wind, she put out to sea. That while on the high seas, about 20 miles from land, the "Kirkloch" was hailed by the "Santa Rosa" that a guard of three officers and eight armed men was put on board, and that she was forcibly taken to Callao, where she arrived on the 17th January.

That she was there detained under arrest, and that it was not until the 10th February following that the vessel was released on condition of the cargo being discharged at Callao or some other port under the authority of the national Government of Peru.

That the case of the "Overdale" differed from that of the "Kirkloch," inasmuch as she actually discharged part of her cargo at Mollendo, and was not seized on the high seas.

That the "Overdale" left Liverpool on the 5th September, 1884, bound for Mollendo, her clearance papers being signed by the Peruvian Consul at the former port, so that she started in ignorance of the notice by the Peruvian Government closing Mollendo to commerce.

That she called only at Falmouth, and reached her destination on the 18th December, when, on the invitation of the Captain of the Port in the service of the rebels, and with the concurrence of the British Vice-Consul, the Master immediately began to discharge his cargo of coals. That the Peruvian guardacosta, "Santa Rosa," arrived off Mollendo on the 24th December, boarded the "Overdale," stopped the further discharge of cargo, took possession of the vessel, and towed her to Callao, which she reached on the 29th. That the fine imposed on the Master for discharging cargo at Mollendo was paid under protest, and that the vessel was subsequently released on the 22nd March.

That, acting on the advice given by the Law Officers of the Crown, Her Majesty's Government had made reiterated applications for redress in the two cases in question, but had not succeeded in obtaining any satisfaction from the Peruvian Government in the case of the "Overdale."

That, at the close of the year 1887, the Peruvian Government at length admitted their liability to grant redress in the case of the "Kirkloch," and that the question of the amount of compensation to be made became the subject of discussion between Her Majesty's Minister at Lima and the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs, which discussion was not yet concluded.

Peru admits liability in case of the "Kirkloch," but proposes to refer case of the "Overdale" to a Mixed Commission.

That, with regard to the "Overdale," the Peruvian Government now proposed that the claim should be submitted to the decision of a Mixed Commission, "in compliance with international usage;" but that Her Majesty's Government were not prepared, having regard to the nature of the question involved, to accept the proposition now made, unless we should be of opinion that such a course was, under all the circumstances, both justifiable and desirable.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was therefore to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the above question, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Question of liability should not be submitted to a Mixed Commission, but when liability is admitted, question of compensation might be dealt with by it.

That, in our opinion, it would not be proper to submit to a Mixed Commission the question of the liability of the Peruvian Government. There is, in our judgment, no question respecting such liability upon which Her Majesty's Government ought to admit that there is any doubt.

Upon the Peruvian Government admitting liability, as in the case of the "Kirkloch," the question of amount of compensation, failing agreement, might reasonably be dealt with by a Mixed Commission.

Seizure of the "Overdale."

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 18th ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a despatch* which had been received from Her Majesty's Minister in Lima, containing the reply of the Peruvian Government to a note which he had addressed to them on the 1st May last, in accordance with the opinion expressed in our Report of the 13th February last, to the effect that Her Majesty's Government could not agree to submit to a Mixed Commission the question of the liability of the Peruvian Government to pay compensation in the case of the British barque "Overdale."

Further Peruvian arguments.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take that reply into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the arguments used by the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs in any way modified the view previously expressed by us, and, if so, to what extent.

That the various papers which accompanied Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter to us, with reference to the case in question, of the 22nd January last, were inclosed, in case we should desire again to refer to them.†

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Annex.

Draft of Despatch to Sir C. Mansfield.

(The words inclosed within brackets were struck out by the Law Officers.)

(No. .)
Sir, Foreign Office, November , 1889.

I HAVE to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch No. 42 of the 18th June last, containing copies of your further correspondence with the Peruvian Government respecting the case of the "Overdale."

Her Majesty's Government have carefully considered, in consultation with the Law Officers of the Crown, the reply, dated the 14th June, of the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs to your note of the 1st May, but can find nothing in his Excellency's arguments to alter the view which they have formed of the question.

The main reason why Her Majesty's Government have felt compelled to decline to submit to arbitration the liability of the Peruvian Government to make compensation in this case is that the liability flows as a natural result from a principle of international law which they have consistently maintained, and which they cannot admit to be open to question.

This principle is that when a port is in the de facto possession of forces in open rebellion against the recognized Government of the country, that Government cannot claim to close such port to commerce by Municipal Decree, but can only do so, according to international law, by means of an efficient blockade jure gentium, the existence of which in itself constitutes an admission on the part of the Government instituting it that a state of belligerency exists. It would seem, however, from Señor Irigoyen's note that he considers that a recognition of belligerent rights is a necessary preliminary before this principle becomes applicable, and that, until such recognition, the Central Government has the right to close or open the ports under its nominal rule to commerce at will by mere proclamation, however much it may be beyond their power at the time to enforce its observance.

This is a qualification of the doctrine which Her Majesty's Government cannot accept. They consider that the question whether during the course of an armed insurrection certain ports can be closed by Municipal Decree, or only by an effectual blockade, depends in each particular instance upon the facts of the case, and that [~~the circumstances of the port of Mollendo at the time of the arrival of the "Overdale" were such as to put it without the category of ports which could be so closed~~].

There can [~~they believe~~] be no doubt that the port of Mollendo was entirely and effectually in possession of the insurgents, and was, for the time being, administered by authorities under their control [~~although they had not the command of the sea.~~

~~If, however, the Peruvian Government wish to dispute their liability to compensate the owners of the "Overdale" on other grounds, Her Majesty's Government would be ready to consider whether their arguments could be referred to arbitration without involving any abandonment of the principle above enunciated.~~]

In so far as that principle is concerned, Her Majesty's Government cannot, for the reasons above indicated, admit that there is matter for either doubt or discussion.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received June 22.)

[After quoting the terms of the reference printed below, dated the 14th June, 1889, they report as on page 95:—]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, June 14, 1889.

Attitude of Portuguese Govt. towards Delagoa Bay Railway Co.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquis of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list with reference to the attitude taken up by the Portuguese Government towards the Delagoa Bay Railway Company under the following circumstances:—

On the 14th December, 1883, a Concession was granted by the Portuguese Government to Colonel McMurdo, an American citizen (recently deceased), for the construction of a railway through Portuguese territory from Delagoa Bay to the Transvaal frontier.

Among the most important provisions of that Concession are the following:—

Terms of Concession.

By Article 1 "the Company" is defined as "the original concessionnaires, and the Company they are bound to organize within the term of six months from the signature of the Contract." This latter Company is explained in Article 51 to be a "Société Anonyme, with its chief office in Lisbon, for the carrying out of the objects referred to in the said Contract, the Statutes of which must be approved by the Government. . . . . . The Company shall be Portuguese to all intents and purposes."

Article 20 grants to the Company the exclusive right of constructing and working the railway, and by section 2 the Portuguese Government undertake not to concede within 100 kilom. (about 60 miles) on each side of the Company's line the right to make any other railway from the coast to the Transvaal frontier which could compete with the Company's line.

Articles 38 and 39 stipulate that the railway must be built on plans approved by the Portuguese Government.

By Article 42, if the plans be not completed within the specified time (three years from approval of plans, i.e., the 28th December, 1885, subsequently extended to December 1887) the Government may declare the Contract annulled, and put the Concession up to auction, giving the Company the proceeds of the sale.

Article 50 makes the Company, its contractors, agents, and workmen, subject, in all matters connected with the Contract, to the Law and Tribunals of the Kingdom of Portugal.

Article 51 stipulates that the Concession shall be vested in a Portuguese Company, the Statutes of which shall be approved by Government, and by subsection 2 (which did not form part of the original Concession, but was added in 1885) the Company is given the unrestricted right of fixing Tariffs; and this right was confirmed by a Portaria, dated the 5th May, 1885, and by a Royal Decree dated the 7th January, 1886. (See Company's letter of the 20th May, 1889, and Inclosure in Mr. Petre's No. 45, Africa, of the 10th April, 1889.)

By Article 53 all questions arising between the Portuguese Government and the Company are to be decided by Arbitrators, of whom two are to be appointed by the Company and two by the Government.

All shares in hands of British Company.

It appears from the Company's letter of the 20th May, 1889, that "seeing that it was impossible to transfer the Concession to an English Company," the Delagoa Bay and East African Railway Company (Limited) was formed to acquire all the bonds and shares of the Portuguese Company in which the Concession was vested, and the British Company claims that it is "therefore in effect the owner of the Concession."

Extension of line demanded by Portuguese Govt.

Concession to be cancelled if extension be not completed by June 24, 1889.

In the summer of 1887, while the railway was in course of construction, plans for an extension of the line to a point some 8 kilom. beyond the terminal point marked on the original plans as approved by Government were, on the ground that the point so marked was not in fact the Transvaal frontier, presented by the Government Engineer, and the Portuguese Government by an official Portaria of the 24th October, 1888, demanded that the Company should at once carry out this extension, and complete it by a date arbitrarily fixed as the 24th June, 1889. They threatened to rescind the Concession unless these terms were at once complied with, and endeavoured, by fear of rescission, to force the Company to abandon their right under the Concession of fixing their own Tariffs, and to adopt a fixed freight rate already determined between the Transvaal Government and the Dutch Company, who held the Contract for the continuation of the line from the Transvaal frontier to Pretoria.

The Company, however, contest the right of the Portuguese Government to fix an arbitrary terminal point for the line until the frontier be officially delimited, and decline to accept the point named as equivalent to the "frontier" mentioned in the Concession, which is admittedly still undefined.

They also claim that this is such a question as they are entitled to refer to arbitration under Article 53 of the Concession.

They further urge that the time limit is a subterfuge adopted with a view of annulling their Concession, as the wet season renders six out of the eight months allowed for completion valueless for practical work, which, it is stated, cannot be commenced till May, thus leaving less than two months for the completion of the work, which they hold to be absolutely insufficient (cf. Company's letters, October 10, November 8, and November 14, 1888).

They stated, however, that they were ready to undertake the work, but claimed compensation for the proposed extension.

The Portuguese Government, on the other hand, contend that the point fixed is, for all practical purposes, the frontier, and that the Company is bound at once to complete the extension without any claim to compensation (cf. the Portarias of October 24th and 29th, 1888, in Mr. Petre's No. 142, October 25, and No. 150, November 6, 1888).

The Company have, however, since informed the Portuguese Government that they are prepared to construct the extension demanded with all reasonable dispatch, leaving the question of compensation to be decided later by arbitration; and they state that the necessary materials have been prepared and shipped, and that some part has already arrived at Lourenço Marques (Company's letter, May 20, 1889).

At the commencement of this dispute the Trustees of the Bondholders of the Company, described as "a body of Englishmen who subscribed the funds," invoked the assistance of Her Majesty's Government, and Sir G. Bonham, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Lisbon, was instructed, "if he saw no objection, to give the Company's agent at Lisbon his good offices so far as he properly could" (to Sir G. Bonham, telegram 13, October 3, 1888).

Sir G. Bonham reported that the Company was Portuguese, and the concessionnaire an American, but that he had used his influence unofficially for the protection of the interests of the British shareholders, and supported the representations made by the United States' Minister on Colonel McMurdo's behalf (Sir G. Bonham's No. 121, Africa, October 11, 1888).

Authority was subsequently given him to protest officially if necessary, but on the 19th October he reported that he had not done so, as there appeared no immediate danger of the Concession being withdrawn, but that he was in communication with the President of the Company, and would intervene if necessary (Sir G. Bonham's No. 130, Africa).

The result of these steps was communicated to the Company (to Delagoa Railway Company, October 15 and November 3, 1888).

Mr. Petre, Her Majesty's Minister, reported somewhat later, on his return to Lisbon, that the attitude of the Portuguese Government in regard to the Tariff question had been adopted at the pressure of Germany, and without full knowledge of the facts, and that they had now seen fit to abandon that claim (cf. Mr. Petre's No. 156, Africa, November 18, 1888). Mr. Petre stated, however, that they maintained the eight months' limit fixed for the completion of the line (Mr. Petre's No. 187 A, December 28), and had approved the plans for the new section (his No. 20, February 28).

The question has attracted considerable public attention in Portugal, and has formed the subject of warm discussion in the Portuguese Chambers (cf. Mr. Petre's Nos. 45 and 46, April 25 and 27, 1889), and the Government have adopted the position that, without any hostile intentions towards a Portuguese Company, they desire to keep up good relations with the Transvaal, because, unless the Lourenço Marques Railway reached Pretoria (i.e., by connection with the Dutch line), it would be useless, and Lourenço Marques would itself be practically ruined. The present Cabinet have, moreover, admitted that they were bound to recognize the right granted to the Company by their predecessors of fixing their own Tariffs, but maintain that they are equally bound by the Agreement made in 1884 with the Transvaal Government, by which their predecessors undertook, in the event of the line not being completed within a certain time, or if the Portuguese and Dutch Companies were unable to come to an agreement as to railway rates, to grant a Concession to the Transvaal for the formation of a tramway from the frontier to Lourenço Marques, and they affirm the determination of the Government to adhere to the time limit of eight months already specified (cf. Mr. Petre's No. 50 A, April 30, and No. 53, May 2).

The English Company have now formally protested against the threatened action of the Portuguese Government, by either rescinding their Concession or granting the Boer Company the right to build the tramway. They contend that to concede the tramway would be a violation of their Concession, and of the declaration made to them by the Government that no such Concession, or promise to grant a Concession, existed.

It was, they state, on the faith of this declaration, and of the right to fix Tariffs, that the capital was subscribed in London. They therefore urge that pressure should be brought to bear upon the Government of Portugal to induce them to declare (Company's letter, May 20, 1889)—

1. That they recognize the Company's right of reference to arbitration as applicable to the extension demanded.

2. That they will not cancel nor confiscate the Concession on the 24th June, should that section of the line as to which a dispute has arisen not be completed.

3. That they will not grant a Concession for a tramway, or other means of communication, between Delagoa Bay and the frontier, in direct violation of their Concession.

As to diplomatic intervention of H. M.'s Govt.

In view of the near approach of the date fixed for completion of the line, and of the resolute attitude of the Portuguese Government, and also taking into consideration the large British interests involved, Lord Salisbury desires to ascertain how far, in your opinion, the status of the British Company (whose Memorandum of Articles of Association is annexed) justifies or demands the intervention of Her Majesty's Government to protect the interests of the British Company arising out of the Concession which was originally granted to an American citizen and to a Portuguese Company.

I am therefore to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government are justified in intervening diplomatically with a view to inducing the Government of Portugal to make the declarations (or any of them) which are desired by the Company.

I am to add that his Lordship will be glad at the same time to be favoured with any general observations upon the matters involved which you may be good enough to offer.

I have, &c.
(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

---

We have taken the papers which accompanied Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 14th instant, and also those which were transmitted with his further letters, dated the 14th and 18th instant respectively, into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Portuguese Govt. have no right to cancel Concession or forfeit line.

That, in our opinion, the Portuguese Government have no right to cancel the Concession, or forfeit the line already constructed. The question of the non-completion of the 8 kilom. by the date named (the 24th June) should be dealt with as a question touching the execution of the Contract (Article 53), and dealt with thereunder subject to the other provisions of the Contract.

It would, however, be unusual and premature to call upon the Portuguese Government to make by anticipation any of the declarations suggested. There are, moreover, some difficulties in the way of diplomatic interference.

In the first place, by Articles 50 and 51, it is provided that the Company shall be a Portuguese Company, and subject in all matters to the Laws and Tribunals of Portugal. Further, there does not appear to be at present any distinct refusal to refer the question to arbitration.

It appears, however, that the money was subscribed by the English Company with the knowledge and approval of the Portuguese Government (see Print of documents relating to the Lourenço Marques and Transvaal Railway, and telegram of the 19th March, 1887).

Circumstances which would justify diplomatic intervention.

If, therefore, the Portuguese Government, in the present state of facts, decline to submit the questions to arbitration under the Contract, and take steps to cancel the Concession and forfeit the line, Her Majesty's Government would be justified in intervening diplomatically in order to prevent such action.

We have, &c.

No. 49.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received August 16.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, August 15, 1889.

Claim of Delagoa Bay and E. African Railway Co. for losses through action of Portuguese Govt.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 10th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 22nd June last,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Delagoa Bay and East African Railway Company,† forwarding a Memorial in which a claim was advanced against the Portuguese Government for compensation in respect of the damage and loss inflicted upon the bond and share holders of the Company by the proceedings of that Government.

That the Memorial recited, in the first place, all the facts connected with the grant of the original Concession and its transfer to the English Company, facts which, for the most part, had been already laid before us in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 16th June.

That it then proceeded to comment upon and reply to the successive paragraphs of the Decree of the Portuguese Government of the 25th June, which in violation, as the memorialists submitted, of the rights of the Company under the Concession, and also of the principles of justice, annulled the Concession and forcibly dispossessed the Company of their railway.

That the Portuguese Government had further, it would be seen, seized the rails, bridgework, and other materials of the Company.

Propositions in Company's Memorial.

That the memorialists then contended that the circumstances of the case, even as presented by the Portuguese Government themselves, clearly established the following propositions:—

1. That the Portuguese Government, in their negotiations and agreement with the Transvaal Government, and their denials of those negotiations and agreements, acted in direct violation of the Concession and in bad faith to the concessionnaire Company, and prevented it from raising funds to carry out its Concession (vide Appendix, pp. 69, 75, and 87).

2. That whatever the position of default of the Portuguese Company (and any default was denied), the Portuguese Government, by their communication to the English investors, waived such default in their favour.

3. That the Company, in fact, and for all practical purposes, completed the railway up to 81 kilom. by the 30th October, 1887, and in accordance with the plans approved by the Portuguese Government, although the Company had a right to claim another year under the Decree of the 28th December, 1885 (see paragraph 22 of Memorial and Appendix N).

4. That nothing in the Concession warranted the Portuguese Government in demanding without compensation the construction of any length of line additional to that indicated to the Company as the full length required of them under the Concession, still less authorized them to fix a time within which the extension should be completed; that the time fixed was not a "reasonable time," or a time fixed after the delimitation of the frontier, as promised by the Portuguese Government in their despatch of the 30th January, 1888), and accordingly that the fixing, on the 24th October, 1888, of a period of eight months for the completion of the 8 kilom., was not intra vires for the Portuguese Government, or in accordance with their promise of the 30th January, 1888, nor was it a reasonable time.

5. That the negotiations of 1888-89 above referred to (point 1) between the Portuguese and Transvaal Governments with respect to the fixing of rates, and the completion of its extension by the Portuguese Company, were, as regarded the former Government, in fraud of the admitted and established rights of the Portuguese Company.

6. That, in confiscating the line and seizing the materials of the English Company destined for the construction of the extension, and in seizing the line on which the debentures of the English Company were secured, the Portuguese Government were acting on the fear expressed in the Cortes by the Minister of Marine, "that the concession of liberty to fix tariffs endangered our Colony of Lourenço Marques," and, in so doing, were violating the rights of the Company.

7. That, in consequence, the Company were entitled to proper and adequate compensation.

---

* No. 48.

† Delagoa Bay Railway Company, July 13, 1889.

That on those grounds the memorialists now prayed for the diplomatic intervention of Her Majesty's Government, as the only possible means of obtaining redress for the injuries inflicted on them, it being evident that no other remedy was now open to them; and submitted that, in consideration of the valuable rights and privileges conferred by the Concession, comprising the monopoly of railway traffic for ninety-nine years, working of telegraph and telephone lines, rights in respect of mines, minerals, and land, &c., the first point of indemnity should be the assumption by the Portuguese Government of the entire responsibility of the Company to the holders of the debentures of the Company amounting to 750,000*l.*; and secondly, that indemnity should be awarded to the holders of the shares in the English Company, the value of which, on the financial grounds and calculations quoted in the Memorial, they assessed at 1,000,000*l.*

As to diplomatic intervention.

That, in view, therefore, of the last paragraph of our previous Report, and of the condition precedent to the intervention of Her Majesty's Government, as therein contemplated, having arisen by the action of the Portuguese Government in cancelling the Concession and forfeiting the line, your Lordship desired to be made acquainted with our views at the earliest date possible on the following points:—

1. Whether the English Company had been damnified by the wrongful action of Portugal?

2. If so, whether (a) Her Majesty's Government were justified in assessing the damages, as proposed by the Company, at 1,000,000*l.*, or at what lower sum; (b) whether they were justified in supporting the claim of the Company that the Portuguese Government should assume entire responsibility for the debentures.

3. If the Portuguese Government refused the sum thus demanded, whether Her Majesty's Government should press for arbitration, or whether the case was clear enough to justify Her Majesty's Government in acting without arbitration.

That Sir Philip Currie was accordingly to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted therein, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, the action of the Portuguese Government has been wrongful, and has violated the clear rights, and injured the interests, of the English Company.

Action of Portugal wrongful. H. M.'s Govt. should press for compensation.

The case is, in our judgment, so clear that we consider Her Majesty's Government will be justified in pressing for compensation, and in declining to submit to arbitration the question of the right of the Portuguese Government to act in the manner complained of. We, however, think that the amount of compensation might reasonably be referred to arbitration, unless an agreement can be obtained by diplomatic means.

Claim for 1,000,000*l.* not unreasonable; but guarantee for 7 p. c. on debentures cannot be required of Portuguese Govt.

We think the claim of the Company that it should receive in respect of its share capital the sum of 1,000,000*l.* is not unreasonable, and may fairly be put forward on behalf of the Company by Her Majesty's Government; but we do not consider that Portugal could properly be called upon to give its Government guarantee for the payment of 7 per cent. interest upon the debentures, as such guarantee would put the debenture holders in a position of far greater advantage than they could have occupied as holders of the securities of the private Company.

We have, &c.

Exterritorial jurisdiction. Draft Order in Council.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 28th August last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of an Order in Council, to be known as "The Siam Order in Council, 1889,"* which had been prepared by Mr. R. S. Wright, under instructions from the Foreign Office, to provide for the exercise of Her Majesty's exterritorial jurisdiction within the dominions and territories of the King of Siam.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to inclose letters from the Home Office, Colonial Office, India Office, and the Treasury; and that he was to request that we would take the draft Order into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether it might properly be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval, and with any general observations which we might have to offer.

Proposed paragraph as to Supreme Court.

We have also the honour to acknowledge the receipt of a Memorandum from Sir Thomas Sanderson, dated the 2nd September, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a copy of a new paragraph which it was proposed to insert between the third and fourth paragraphs of Article 11 of the draft Order for Siam.

That the paragraph in question had been drafted by Mr. Wright, and had been inserted to meet certain complaints which had been made with reference to the action of the Consular Court.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Approve draft Order as altered.

That, in our opinion, the draft Order, as altered and initialled by us, may properly be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

Butler v. Butler. Request for certificate as to validity of Swiss sentence of divorce in Great Britain.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 14th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of a despatch (together with other papers relating to its subject), which it was proposed to address to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Berne with reference to a matrimonial suit which was pending before the Swiss Federal Tribunals.

That the circumstances of the case were, so far as appeared material for the present purpose, shortly stated in the draft despatch, but that they were given in fuller detail in the inclosures to Mr. Leveson-Gower's No. 26 of the 11th May last.

That the provisions of the Swiss Law with regard to divorce would be found in Part E (Articles 43-57 inclusive) of the "Loi Fédérale" of the 24th December, 1874, of which a copy was annexed, and that it was believed that the facts of the case were in themselves such as would, subject to the observance of Article 56, induce the Swiss Tribunals to grant Mrs. Butler a divorce either under Article 46 (c), or under Article 47 of that Law.

Swiss domicil of parties doubtful.

That there appeared, however, to be some doubt whether at any rate in contemplation of English legal doctrine on the point, the marital domicil, of the parties could be regarded as Swiss.

That it would be remembered that in two former cases, which were of a much simpler character (see Law Officers' Reports, Switzerland, No. 59, of the 7th April, 1887, and Switzerland, No. 53, of the 14th November, 1888), Her Majesty's Government, after previous consultation with us, granted certificates of the kind now again sought for, but that the circumstances of the present case had led to a careful reconsideration, from a general point of view, of the policy involved in the grant of such certificates, and that the conclusions arrived at would be found in the draft despatch now submitted for our observations.

Submitting draft refusing such certificate.

That Sir T. V. Lister was to request that we would take that draft into our consideration in connection with the other papers transmitted with his letter, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether its terms were right and proper.

That your Lordship would be glad at the same time to be favoured with any modifications or additions which we might desire to suggest with regard to its language, and with any observations which we might have to offer upon the general questions involved.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to Approve draft despatch.

Draft of Despatch from the Marquis of Salisbury to Mr. Leveson-Gower.

(No. .)

Foreign Office, June , 1889.

Sir,

I HAVE had under my consideration your despatch No. 26 of the 11th instant, and its inclosures, relative to the divorce suit of Butler v. Butler, which the petitioner, Mrs. Butler, intends to institute against her husband, a British subject, before the Swiss Tribunals at Berne.

From the papers inclosed in your despatch it appears that the respondent, Butler, was, on the 12th March last, condemned to ten days' imprisonment by the Juge de Police, at Berne, for deserting his family, and for leading an irregular life; that for some years past he has been addicted to drink; and that he has frequently threatened his wife.

On this state of facts the injured wife would not be entitled to obtain a divorce if she sued her husband in the matrimonial Courts of this country; but it is understood that, according to Swiss law, assuming the marital domicil to be Swiss, she would obtain a divorce provided that it was established to the satisfaction of the Tribunal, before which the suit was brought, that its decree would be recognized in Great Britain, of which country the parties are subjects.

It further appears that the Federal Government have requested you to submit the case to Her Majesty's Government with a view to ascertain whether, under the circumstances, they would be prepared, in order that the provisions of Article 56 of the Federal Law of 1874 may be satisfied, to furnish a declaration to the effect that a decree of divorce, if pronounced by a competent Swiss Tribunal in the present suit, will be recognized by the English Courts.

In reply, I have to request you to explain to the Federal Government that in the previous instances of Cunliffe-Owen v. Cunliffe-Owen, and of Lloyd v. Lloyd, the legal aspect of both of which cases was so exceedingly simple as to admit practically of no doubt, Her Majesty's Government have, out of courtesy to that Government, somewhat departed from their customary practice in such matters in order, if possible, to meet the difficulty which had arisen in consequence of the rather unusual provision in Article 56 of the Federal Law.

The circumstances of the present case, however, differ materially from those of the two cases above referred to, and raise points of considerable difficulty, which have led Her Majesty's Government very carefully to reconsider from a general aspect the questions which are involved in, and the risks which may arise from, the habitual grant of such certificates.

They feel that, having regard to the interests of British subjects which may be involved, they would not be justified in allowing the somewhat dangerous innovation which has been introduced by the two cases to which reference has already been made to become a general practice.

It is, having regard to the system of law and procedure prevailing in this country, practically impossible for Her Majesty's Government to do more than to furnish a foreign Government, in an exceptional case which may arise, with the opinion of the Law Advisers of the Crown for the time being on an abstract question of English Law.

You will, while informing the Swiss Government in this sense, be careful to add that such opinions given by the Law Officers have no judicial force, and are no more binding on the Tribunals of this country than are those of any other legal experts.

Her Majesty's Government can consequently in no case guarantee what the character or effect of any future decision of these Tribunals may be with regard to the matters involved in opinions thus expressed.

I am, &c.

Marriages by a British Vice-Consul, of illegitimate son, born in Russia, of a British mother.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of a despatch which it was proposed to address to Her Majesty's Minister at Berne, with reference to the case to which he called attention in his despatch No. 1, Consular, of the 7th October last, and as to which he therein requested your Lordship's instructions.

That it would be seen from that despatch (Mr. Scott's No. 1, Consular, of the 7th October, 1889) that the illegitimate son, born at St. Petersburgh, of an English mother, had applied to the British Vice-Consul at Lausanne, within whose Vice-Consular district he was then residing, with a view to being married at that Vice-Consulate;

That your Lordship possessed no definite information as to whether the lady to whom the applicant proposed to be married was, or was not, a British subject; but that, under the circumstances, the nationality of that lady appeared to have a most important bearing on the case;

That that question had, therefore, been treated in such a manner in the draft which was submitted to us as would, it was thought, enable Mr. Scott, on ascertaining the lady's nationality, to deal at once with the whole matter;

Draft instructions.

That Sir T. V. Lister was to request that we would take the draft despatch into our consideration in connection with the other papers which accompanied it,[*] and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether its terms were such as were right and proper, having regard to all the circumstances of the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to Foreign Office, , 1889.

Sir,

Your despatch No. 1 of the 7th October, requesting instructions in regard to the proposed marriage of the illegitimate son, born at St. Petersburgh of a mother of British nationality, with a lady whose nationality is not stated, at the British Vice-Consulate at Lausanne, has received my careful consideration.

In reply, I have to state that in this case it is quite clear, as pointed out in your despatch, that the man is not a British subject; while, as regards English law, he is a person either [~~of no nationality at all or~~] of Russian nationality or of no nationality at all. It appears, however, from your despatch that in Russia, for purposes of Russian law, he [~~may~~] might be considered to follow the nationality (i.e., British) of his mother.

If the intended bride be not a British subject, it follows that neither of the parties to this intended marriage is of British nationality, and it cannot therefore be celebrated at one of Her Majesty's Legations or Consulates.

If, on the other hand, the woman be a British subject, the marriage can be celebrated at either Legation or Consulate, inasmuch as in that case one of the intending parties thereto is a British subject. [~~But it would be well that she should be warned that, according to English law, the national status previously possessed by a woman becomes, upon her marriage, merged in that of her husband, and that she therefore, if she marries a person who, in contemplation of English law, possesses no nationality, she will also herself be regarded in England as devoid of national status.~~]

If the Vice-Consul performs the marriage he should, in registering it, enter either "Russian" or "no nationality" opposite the name of the husband, and thus comply with the terms of the General Instruction to which you have referred in your despatch now under reply.

You should make a communication in this sense to Vice-Consul Galland, for his guidance.

No. 53.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received March 27.)

Haïdar-Pacha and Ismidt Railway. Pending legal proceedings.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, March 27, 1889.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list with reference to certain proceedings now pending before the Ottoman Tribunals at the suit of the Sublime Porte against the lessees of the Haïdar-Pacha and Ismidt Railway.

That the lessees in question, who now consisted of Colonel Alt, a British, and M. Seefelder, an Austrian, subject, obtained in 1880 a Convention from the Porte for the lease of the line (Document A).

Terms of Convention for lease of line.

That the stipulations of this instrument, which were important for the consideration of the present question, were contained in Articles IX and XI of the Convention and Article 49 of the "Cahier des Charges" annexed to it. That they were as follows:—

"Article IX. A toute époque de la location le Gouvernement Impérial aura le droit d'en effectuer le rachat, moyennant le paiement:—

"1. De toutes les dépenses résultant, pour les locataires, des obligations par eux prises, aux termes de l'Article V ci-dessus, sans autre intérêt et déduction faite de la partie du capital déjà amorti;

"Plus une indemnité de 100,000 fr.

"Le Gouvernement reconnaît, par contre, aux locataires le droit de préférence, à conditions égales, sur toute autre Société pour toute extension de la présente ligne.

"La ligne et l'embranchement de Phéner-Baghdjé seront remis au Gouvernement contre le paiement des sommes ci-indiquées.

"La remise du chemin de fer et la reprise des objets devront être faites dans ce cas comme il est indiqué au Cahier des Charges, mais le Gouvernement devra acheter à dire d'experts tous les approvisionnements. La dite remise sera faite dans le mois d'Octobre qui suivra la demande de rachat.

"Article XI. Toute contestation qui pourra s'élever entre le Gouvernement Impérial et les locataires, au sujet de l'interprétation ou de l'exécution des stipulations du présent Acte et du Cahier des Charges annexé, sera jugée par les Tribunaux ordinaires, en Première et en Seconde Instance et en Cassation, comme il est procédé à l'égard des sujets Ottomans."

Article 49 of the "Cahier des Charges":—

"En cas de reprise de la ligne par le Gouvernement avant l'expiration de la location, notification devra en être faite aux locataires au moins quatre mois à l'avance."

That it was unnecessary to go into the questions which had arisen between the lessees and the Turkish Government, and upon the merits of which it would be impossible to pronounce an opinion.

Claim of Porte on lessees.

That the complaint of the Porte was that the lessees had failed to execute the conditions of the lease, and that in particular, on a balance of accounts, they owed, for arrears of rent and stores supplied to them, a sum of over 50,000*l.* (see Rustem Pasha, 10th January, 1889, Document B).

Counter-claims of lessees.

That the lessees, on the other hand, contended that it was owing to obstruction on the part of the Turkish Government and officials that the Convention had not been executed; and they produced an abstract of account to show that the Porte owed to them, for money spent upon the line and advances, with interest, a sum of no less than 260,000*l.* (see Documents C and D).

Turkish Agreement for sale of line to the Deutsche Bank.

That in September last the Turkish Government concluded a fresh Agreement with the representatives of the Deutsche Bank of Berlin, agreeing to hand over the railway, free of all charges and impediments, in exchange for a sum of 6,000,000 fr. (say 240,000*l.*), and further giving to the new concessionnaires the right of making extensions of the line in Asia Minor (which had been given to the lessees by Article IX of the Convention quoted above).

Notice of termination of lease.

That the Porte, in pursuance of this new Agreement, gave notice on the 15th (27th) September last of the termination of the lease under Article IX of the Convention (Zihni Pasha to M. Seefelder, 15th (27th) September, 1888 (Annex 2 to Document C).

Claims of lessees as to notice.

That the lessees maintained that, under Article IX of the Convention, coupled with Article 49 of the "Cahier des Charges," they were entitled to four months' notice, and were only required to surrender the line in the month of October following the expiration of that period.

Their rights as to extension of line.

That they further contended that the right of preference in making extensions of the line given them in Article IX was independent of the possession of the railway, and remained with them even after the Porte had resumed the line.

Seizure of line by the Porte.

That in face of the protest of the lessees and the remonstrances of Her Majesty's Government, the Turkish authorities took forcible possession of the railway on the 7th January last without any form of legal process or judicial decision.

Deposits, and offer to discuss matter made by Porte.

That the Turkish Ambassador made a communication on the 11th January in explanation of this proceeding (Document E), in the course of which he stated that, notwithstanding the large sum which was owing to the Turkish Government by the lessees, the Porte had deposited 100,000 fr., representing the price of the repurchase of the line, and a further sum of 1,000,000 fr. as a guarantee for any claims or indemnity to which the lessees might be found to be entitled after an examination of the accounts, and he also gave an assurance that the Porte was prepared to discuss with the lessees their reciprocal claims, either amicably or before the Tribunals.

Arbitration proposed.

That the efforts of Her Majesty's Embassy at Constantinople had since that date been directed to obtaining the consent of the Porte to a reference of the whole of the questions in dispute to impartial arbitration.

That the Porte had shown a disposition to shelter itself behind Article XI of the Convention (quoted at the beginning of this Memorandum), which provided that all disputes as to the interpretation or execution of the stipulations of that instrument, and of the "Cahier des Charges," should be decided by the Turkish Courts.

That Her Majesty's Ambassador had contended that the Porte, having seized the line without reference to these Courts, had violated the Convention, and could no longer appeal to it, and this view had been approved by Her Majesty's Government (Documents F and G).

Advice given to lessees as to legal proceedings.

That the lessees had now received a citation to appear before the Civil Court of First Instance at Pera at the suit of the Porte. They had been advised by Sir W. White to put in an appearance, and to plead that the Court has no jurisdiction. But their legal advisers were opposed to this course, and urged that Her Majesty's Ambassador should be instructed to announce to the Porte that he would not allow the British subjects concerned to present themselves, and that he should insist on reference of the case to arbitration (Document H).

That they had been informed that, in Lord Salisbury's opinion, the proper course would be that the defendants should at once enter a protest to the jurisdiction, and appear, under protest, to argue the point, so as to prevent Judgment going by default. That that, however, appeared to be a question for the consideration of the lessees themselves (Document I).

Article XI ultra vires.

That, inasmuch as no British subject had a right to deprive himself by contract with a foreign Government of the protection of his own Government (see on this point Law Officers' Reports, 14th February, 1865, 15th June, 1867, 24th December, 1881, 14th May, 1884) (Document K), it was suggested that Colonel Alt's assent to the XIth Article of the Convention was (in so far as that Article purported to have the effect of withdrawing him from British protection, or of depriving him of the benefits secured by Treaty to all British subjects, without distinction, in the Ottoman dominions) ultra vires on his part.

That two letters from Colonel Alt were also inclosed (Documents L and M), the first containing notes on the whole case, the latter forwarding a copy of the citation served on M. Seefelder.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to—

(1.) Whether Her Majesty's Government were justified in taking exception, diplomatically, to the jurisdiction of the Ottoman Tribunals in the case, and, if so, on what grounds such exception might most properly be based, and what action should be taken by Her Majesty's Ambassador for that purpose.

(2.) Whether Her Majesty's Government were justified in insisting, and should insist, that the matters in dispute between the parties should be submitted to impartial arbitration.

That his Lordship would, at the same time, be glad to be favoured with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We were also favoured with a Memorandum from Sir P. Currie, dated the 9th instant, covering a further despatch from Sir W. White (No. 90 of the 2nd March, 1889) on the same subject.

Porte insist on statement of amount of claims prior to arbitration.

We were further honoured with a letter from Sir P. Currie, dated the 14th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a telegram* from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, reporting that the Grand Vizier, before admitting the principle of arbitration in the case in question, insisted that the lessees should state the maximum amount at which they assessed their various claims, while the agents of the lessees refused to give that information until they received the assurance that the Porte had irrevocably accepted arbitration.

Question as to supporting lessees.

That it would be seen from the correspondence with Colonel Alt, also inclosed,† that he considered that precaution a necessary one, in order to avoid fresh issues being raised as an excuse for interminable delay. That he also pressed to be informed of the decision of Her Majesty's Government, after receiving our opinion, as to the extent to which the lessees should be supported in refusing the jurisdiction of the Turkish Courts.

That Sir P. Currie was to request that we would take these papers into our consideration in connexion with those already forwarded to us in his letter of the 8th instant, and that, in reporting on the questions raised in that letter, we would, at the same time, favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the condition insisted upon by the Grand Vizier as a precedent to arbitration in this case was one which Her Majesty's Government could reasonably and properly press upon the acceptance of the agents of the lessees.

We have taken all the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Jurisdiction of Courts as to Convention.

That, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government are not justified in taking exception diplomatically to the jurisdiction of the Ottoman Tribunals upon questions relating to the interpretation or carrying out of the Convention of the 8th April, 1880.

The matter is one of contract between the Ottoman Government and certain persons, one of whom is a British subject.

Article XI not ultra vires.

We see no ground for the contention that Article XI is ultra vires: it only creates a mode of adjustment of disputes between the Contracting Parties.

Jurisdiction of Courts as to money claims.

The money claims of the Ottoman Government included in the citation of the 30th January, 1889, are, in our opinion, clearly within Article XI, and the jurisdiction of the Ottoman Tribunals could not be successfully contested.

Jurisdiction of Courts as to seizure of line.

As regards the question of wrongful turning out the point is not clear, but as the Ottoman Government have purported to act under the powers of Article IX of the Convention, we think it would be difficult to contend successfully that the Ottoman Courts had no jurisdiction to decide the question.

Arbitration desirable.

If the Ottoman Courts find that the action of the Ottoman Government in taking possession was in no way justified by the contract, they would, in our opinion, have no further jurisdiction. It is, therefore, very desirable that, if possible, all matters should be dealt with by arbitration.

It appears that the Ottoman Government is inclined to accept the principle of arbitration upon all matters, but requires that the lessees should, in the first instance, specify the total amount of their claim.

Specification of amount of claim not unreasonable.

Unless there is substantial ground for suggesting that the requisition is not bonâ fide, it is not, in our opinion, unreasonable, and we think its acceptance should be pressed upon the agents of the lessees.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received July 13.)

Royal Courts of Justice, July 11, 1889.

My Lord,

Disputes as to payment of rent.

Turkish claim to exclusive jurisdiction of Turkish Courts.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 18th May last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin,* with reference to a claim of exclusive competency which had been asserted on behalf of the native Turkish Tribunals in all cases of dispute arising within the Ottoman dominions between landlord and tenant in relation to rent, even although the parties to such disputes should be the subjects of a foreign State, or States, to which ex-territorial jurisdiction had been granted by the Sublime Porte.

Claim based on Protocol of 1868.

That the claim was based, in so far as British subjects were concerned, upon the Protocol relative to the admission of British subjects in Turkey to the right of holding real property, which was signed at Constantinople on the 28th July, 1868, and by Article II of which it was provided that "foreigners who are proprietors of real property, urban or rural, are in consequence assimilated to Ottoman subjects in all that concerns their real property.

"Such assimilation has for its legal effect—

"1. . . . . . . .
"2. . . . . . . .

"3. To render them directly amenable to the Ottoman Civil Courts in regard to all questions relative to landed property ('propriété foncière'), and to all real actions ('actions réelles'), both as plaintiffs and defendants, even when both parties are foreign subjects, the whole on the same footing, under the same conditions and in the same forms as Ottoman proprietors, and without the power of availing themselves in such matters of their personal nationality, but under the reservation of the immunities attaching to their persons and their personal property according to the terms of Treaties."

That the question seemed practically to turn upon whether an action for rent was either a "question relative à la propriété foncière," or an "action réelle," within the ordinary signification of those expressions, and that as the determination of that point involved technical considerations of foreign rather than of English law, it was thought advisable to refer the papers, in the first instance, to the eminent French jurist, M. Clunet, who advises Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris on such matters, and from whom an elaborate Report had now been received, and was inclosed for our assistance.

M. Clunet's opinion opposed to Turkish claim.

That it would be seen that in M. Clunet's view the Turkish contention could not be supported, and that the decision of disputes of the nature in question between foreign subjects was amongst the exclusive attributions of the suitable Consular Court in each particular case.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion upon the validity or otherwise of the claim put forward on behalf of the Turkish Tribunals in so far as British subjects were concerned, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Report—

Claim cannot be admitted with regard to personal actions for rent.

That, in our opinion, the claim of exclusive competency made on behalf of the native Turkish Tribunals cannot be admitted so far as it relates to merely personal actions for rent, or damages arising out of contract, when such actions do not involve, in their determination, any question as to the title to the land itself, or the right to possession or occupation.

Questions of title or possession excluded from Consular jurisdiction. Recommend joint action.

When, however, the action does involve such question, it is, in our opinion, excluded from the jurisdiction of the Consular Court by the Law and Protocol to which Great Britain has assented. As other Governments have also accepted that Law, we think that any representation which it may be deemed advisable to make to the Porte should be made in concert with such Powers, or at all events after ascertaining their views.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received July 18.)

[In reply to the following reference the Law Officers reported as below on the 17th July, 1889.]

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, June 15, 1889.

Cyphered telegrams between—(1) Consuls in Turkey; (2) Consuls in Turkey and those in Egypt.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquis of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the question of whether the Porte is entitled either to suspend temporarily or to entirely stop telegraphic inter-communication in cypher (1) generally between British Consular officers in various parts of the Ottoman Empire; and (2) particularly between such officers in places of that Empire directly under the authority of the Porte and similar officers in Egypt and its dependencies.

Stipulations of Convention of 1875.

By the International Telegraphic Convention signed at St. Petersburgh on the 22nd July, 1875, to which Turkey was a party and to which, under the provisions of its XVIIIth Article, England acceded on the 7th of the following January, it was stipulated as follows:—

"ARTICLE V.

"Les télégrammes sont classés en trois catégories:—

"1. Télégrammes d'État: ceux qui émanent du Chef de l'État, des Ministres, des Commandants-en-chef de terre et de mer, et des Agents Diplomatiques ou Consulaires des Gouvernements Contractants, ainsi que les réponses à ces mêmes télégrammes.

"2. Télégrammes de Service: ceux qui émanent des Administrations Télégraphiques des États Contractantes et qui sont relatifs, soit au service de la télégraphie internationale, soit à des objets d'intérêt public déterminés de concert par les dites Administrations.

"3. Télégrammes privés. Dans la transmission les télégrammes d'État jouissent de la priorité sur les autres télégrammes.

"ARTICLE VI.

"Les télégrammes d'État et de service peuvent être émis en langage secret dans toutes les relations.

"Les télégrammes privés peuvent être échangés en langage secret entre deux États qui admettent ce mode de correspondance.

"Les États qui n'admettent pas les télégrammes privés en langage secret au départ et à l'arrivée, doivent les laisser circuler en transit sauf le cas de suspension défini à l'Article VIII.

"ARTICLE VII.

"Les Hautes Parties Contractantes se réservent la faculté d'arrêter la transmission de tout télégramme privé qui paraîtrait dangereux pour la sécurité de l'État, ou qui serait contraire aux lois du pays, à l'ordre public, ou aux bonnes mœurs.

"ARTICLE VIII.

"Chaque Government se réserve aussi la faculté de suspendre le service de la télégraphie internationale pour un temps indéterminé s'il le juge nécessaire, soit d'une manière générale, soit seulement sur certaines lignes et pour certaines natures de correspondance à charge par lui d'en aviser immédiatement chacun des autres Gouvernements Contractants."

Cases of telegrams detained.

In March last a telegram in cypher, addressed by the British Consul at Jeddah to the British Acting Consul at Suakin (Egyptian territory), was detained by the Turkish Telegraph authorities established at Suakin, on the ground, as stated four days later in reply to inquiries as to its non-delivery, that, "according to Ottoman Regulations, private messages cannot be sent in a secret language or in cypher in Ottoman territory."

Further, a cypher telegram which the Consul at Jeddah addressed to Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Egypt in explanation of these circumstances, was detained at Jeddah on the same ground, though the Turkish authorities, it is stated, allowed cypher messages to pass between a merchant at Jeddah and a merchant at Suakin (Sir E. Baring, No. 159, 24th March, 1889).

Communications with the Porte.

To the remonstrances which were addressed to the Porte by Her Majesty's Government, it was at first objected (see Sir W. White's No. 122 of the 27th March) that telegraphic communications in cypher between Consuls are not permitted, such prohibition being authorized by, and exercised under, the provisions of the International Telegraphic Convention, Articles V, VI, and VIII.

Subsequently, the Porte refused to allow such cypher communications, on the ground, as stated in the note verbale inclosed in Sir W. White's despatch No. 147, of the 14th April, that "par mesure générale les Consulats étrangers dans l'Empire ne pouvant correspondre entre eux par télégrammes chiffrés, le Ministère Impérial regrette vivement de ne pouvoir donner suite à la demande qui fait l'objet du 'takrir' précité."

Under instructions from the Marquis of Salisbury, Her Majesty's Ambassador thereupon addressed a note to the Turkish Minister for Foreign Affairs (Inclosure in Sir W. White's No. 161 of the 27th April), inquiring on what Article of the Convention the Porte relies in justification of its refusal to allow Her Majesty's Consuls at Jeddah and Suakin to exchange cypher and code telegraphic messages, and stating that Her Majesty's Government must insist on the right of such communication being admitted.

1889

To this last-named representation the Porte has replied (Inclosure in Sir W. White's No. 178 of the 15th May) that the Convention has reference only to international telegraphic correspondence, and that, moreover, its VIIIth Article gives to the Parties to it the faculty to prohibit certain kinds of correspondence, and that the Porte considers that it has, à fortiori, the right to make such a Regulation for internal telegrams ("pour le service intérieur"); that the maintenance of the prohibition, which is general, being necessary, the Porte can make no exception in favour of Her Majesty's Government.

Several questions arise in regard to the contentions put forward by the Porte:—

Questions as to:—

(1) Rights of Consuls under Convention;

1. Does the International Telegraphic Convention permit Consuls in a foreign State to communicate with each other in cypher or conventional language (Articles V and VI)?

(2) Effect of Convention on telegrams to Egypt.

2. In the present case, Turkey having been a party to the Convention itself, and Egypt having only acceded to it subsequently, are telegrams between Consuls in Turkey and Consuls in Egypt to be considered as subject to internal Regulations, and, therefore, outside the Convention, or as coming under its stipulations?

(3) Right of Porte to stop telegrams without reason or notice.

3. If such communications should be held to come under the terms of the Convention, is the Porte justified in taking advantage of the faculty given under Article VIII to suspend certain telegraphic correspondence in cypher without assigning sufficient reason, and without due notice to all the other parties to the international arrangement?

Right of Khedive to conclude non-political Treaties.

With regard to the second point above mentioned, I am to remind you that by Firmans of dates anterior to the International Telegraphic Convention of 1876 (see printed collection of Firmans, 1841 to 1879 herewith) the Khedive was authorized to enter into Conventions of a non-political character with foreign Powers; and I am to suggest, for your consideration, whether the fact of Egypt having acceded to the Convention by a Decree dated the 21st December, 1876 (see Hertslet's Commercial Treaties, vol. xv, p. 580), which was some time after the signature of the Convention by Turkey, and without protest from the Porte, it may not be assumed that the Convention would not, without such accession, have been applicable to Egypt, and that, therefore, Egypt, as regards the question of telegraphic communications, is not subject to any internal Regulations made by the Porte.

As to power of Porte to stop telegrams between Consuls and Embassy.

I am also to point out that, though the Porte has not as yet claimed to interfere with telegraphic communications in cypher between British Consular officers in Turkey and Her Majesty's Embassy at Constantinople, such communications, according to what appears to be the view of the Turkish Government, are matter for internal regulation, and might at any time be stopped if Her Majesty's Government admit that it is open to the Porte at all times to stop telegraphic communication in cypher between Her Majesty's Consuls in various parts of the Ottoman Empire.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion on the questions submitted in this letter and with any general observations which you may have to offer on the case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

---

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Convention does not affect internal telegrams.

That, in our opinion, the contention of the Porte that telegrams "pour le service intérieur" are altogether unaffected by the International Convention is correct, and that Her Majesty's Government cannot claim that British Consuls in Turkey have the right to communicate with each other in cypher.

Porte bound to give notice of suspension of cyphered telegrams to Egypt.

We are, however, of opinion that telegrams between Consuls in Turkey and Consuls in Egypt are international telegrams within the Convention, and that the Porte is not entitled to suspend cypher correspondence between such Consuls without immediately notifying the fact and the extent of such suspension to each of the other Governments which are parties to the Convention.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received August 17.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, August 16, 1889.

Bonds of the original Ottoman External Debt cancelled by the Turkish Government.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 13th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list with reference to the position of certain holders of bonds of the original Ottoman External Debt, which had been declared to be forfeited, and had been cancelled by the Turkish Government under the following circumstances:—

That some short time since complaints reached Her Majesty's Government that a large number of bonds of the original Turkish Debt—some 800,000*l.* to 900,000*l.* worth, it was said—had been cancelled, on the ground that they were not presented in proper time for conversion; and that it was contended, on behalf of certain holders of those bonds, that the notice given of the intended conversion was altogether inadequate, and that great and unwarrantable hardship had thus been inflicted.

That the question was referred to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, and that from his Report it would appear that the matter had been already brought to his notice, but that he was unable to suggest any remedy, as, on the one hand, the Ottoman Government considered that they discharged all their previous liabilities by the arrangement come to in 1881 with the Delegates of the Foreign Bondholders, and, on the other, the Council of Administration of the Ottoman Debt regarded those bonds as cancelled and of no value.

That the particulars of the arrangement come to between the Porte and the bondholders in 1881 would be found at pp. 73 to 84 of the accompanying Parliamentary Paper ("Turkey No. 2, 1882").

Decree of 1881 requiring bonds to be registered.

That the Treasury, whose opinion had also been taken on the subject, pointed out that the Decree of 1881 required, no doubt, that the bond should be registered, but that it did not provide that failure to register would entail forfeiture.

Notice of 1888 respecting forfeiture of bonds.

That the Council of Administration of the Ottoman Debt, however, published a Notice, dated Constantinople, 10th April, 1888, declaring that all bonds not presented at the Imperial Ottoman Bank at Constantinople for registration or conversion by the 13th May, 1888, would be forfeited.

Was Notice sufficient to justify forfeiture?

That it was a question whether that Notice was sufficient to justify the Turkish Government in treating bonds not presented within the time specified as forfeited.

That apart, however, from the question of the sufficiency of the Notice, and even assuming its sufficiency, the Board of Treasury did not consider that the circumstances of the case justified the attachment of so severe a penalty as the forfeiture of the bonds.

That your Lordship was, in those circumstances, desirous of being advised whether any, and, if so, what remedies were open to such of the aggrieved bondholders as were British subjects, and whether, in our opinion, any grounds existed which called for the intervention of Her Majesty's Government on their behalf.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted therein, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

That we are of opinion that the Council of Administration was entitled to make reasonable regulations to provide for the registration of bonds, and thereby fix a time to limit time for registration of bonds, but Her Majesty's Government may represent that period allowed was unreasonably short.

after which the obligation to pay an unregistered bond would not be recognized, and, in considering the validity of the Notice of the 10th April, 1888, it must be remembered that a considerable period, namely, from the 20th December, 1881, to the 1st (13th) February, 1885, was permitted for registration. Still, having regard to the fact that no step was taken or Notice issued until April 1888, we think that the period allowed, viz., up to the 13th May, before forfeiture, unreasonably short, and that a representation may properly be made by Her Majesty's Government to the Council of Administration on behalf of British subjects holding bonds which have been declared forfeited pursuant to such Notice.

Doubt whether Mr. Maclean has any legal claim.

It is right, however, that we should add that we doubt whether Mr. Maclean has any legal claim, and there are not, in our opinion, any legal proceedings by which he can enforce any supposed claim.

My Lord,

Proposed transfer of coal depôts in Constantinople to Beicos.

Levy of duty to cover cost.

Question of a monopoly, &c.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. V. Lister's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin* relative to a Circular note verbale which Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople had received from the Sublime Porte, and in which it was proposed to transfer all the depôts for the sale of coal in that city and its suburbs to a spot near Beicos on the Bosphorus about 10 miles distant, and, in order to cover the cost of the construction and maintenance of that establishment, to levy upon each ton of coal deposited half a shilling as a duty on disembarkation, and a shilling as a duty for deposit and delivery (droit de dépôt et de sortie).

That we should observe that Sir W. White had obtained the opinion of the Chamber of Commerce of Constantinople, and a Memorandum on the subject from the coal merchants affected by the proposal; and, further, that his Excellency forwarded copy of a despatch from Mr. Consul Wrench, who stated that the measure would not only constitute a breach of faith, but that it was in direct contravention to the unexpired Treaties of 1861 and 1862, and who drew special attention to Article VI of the Treaty of Commerce between Austria and Turkey.

That we should also perceive that Her Majesty's Ambassador, in acknowledging the note verbale, stated that the question had been referred to Her Majesty's Government, but that, without waiting for instructions, Her Majesty's Embassy made objection to the proposed plan, on the ground that large vested interests of British subjects would be seriously affected thereby, and also a serious impediment be opposed to that freedom of trade and navigation which was guaranteed to Great Britain by ancient and modern Treaties.

That the inclosed Memorandum, prepared in the Foreign Office, explained the various aspects of the question, and quoted the clause upon which Mr. Consul Wrench relied, of Article VI of the Austrian Treaty of 1862, the benefits of which Great Britain enjoyed in virtue of the Capitulations of 1675 (see Law Officers' Report of the 18th May, 1883).

That Sir T. V. Lister was, accordingly, to inquire whether, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government had any right, under the Capitulations or under Treaties between Turkey and other foreign Powers, all the advantages of which were secured to Great Britain by the said Capitulations, to raise objection to the scheme for removing the coal depôts in question to the place above indicated, and for levying dues in the manner and for the purpose stated, on the ground either that a monopoly was thereby created, or that the said dues were in the nature of a tax, or that an impediment was thus opposed to the freedom of trade and navigation.

That Sir T. V. Lister was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted therein, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

No Treaty right to object.

That, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government has not any Treaty right to raise objection to the removal of the coal depôts in question.

Compensation may be asked for individual losses, &c.

If the carrying out of the order were to involve the confiscation of, or injury to, the property of particular British subjects, there might be ground for representations to the Porte in favour of the grant of compensation to persons so injured, but we do not gather, from the papers before us, that any such case can be maintained.

[In reply to the following letter from the Foreign Office, the Law Officers report as on p. 114:—]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, September 18, 1889.

Gentlemen,

Treaty rights in Turkey on termination of Treaty of 1861.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquis of Salisbury, to transmit to you the accompanying copy in print of a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople,* inclosing a Memorandum by Mr. Fane, Secretary of Her Majesty's Embassy, on the Treaty rights of Her Majesty's subjects in the Ottoman Empire. This important question was submitted to the consideration of your predecessors in office, whose Report thereon, dated the 18th May, 1883,† is herewith inclosed, together with all the papers referred to therein.‡ In that Report your predecessors stated that, on consideration of the information before them, they were of opinion that it was open to contention that Article I of the Treaty of 1861 granted most-favoured-nation treatment for all time, and was not extinguished by the said Treaty of 1861 having terminated; they did not, however, think that this view could be insisted on as clearly sound, and suggested that the sounder view probably was that British subjects would, after the termination of the Treaty of 1861, become entitled to the benefit of all Capitulations and Treaties prior to the Treaty of 1838.

Opinion of Law Officers of May 18, 1883:—

This opinion was assumed to involve the following positions:—

1. English Capitulations and future favours granted to other nations.

1. That the English Capitulations did not grant the enjoyment of favours granted in the future to other nations; but that all such favours granted up to the date of the Treaty of 1838 were confirmed for ever to British subjects by the Ist Article of that Treaty, and that such grant was not effected by the two facts that the Treaty of 1861, repeating such grant, had replaced that of 1838, and that the Treaty of 1861 had itself terminated.

2. Revival of Capitulations on expiration of Treaties modifying them.

2. That the stipulations contained in the Ottoman Capitulations were of such a nature that, although they might be modified by subsequent Treaties, they revived on the termination of the Treaties modifying them.

3. Treaty of 1838 did not revive on termination of

3. That the stipulations contained in the Treaty of 1838 did not share this Treaty of 1861.

function with those in the Capitulations, and did not revive on the termination of the Treaty of 1861.

Memorandum by Mr. Fane.

Mr. Fane has collected and set forth in his Memorandum certain evidence bearing on these points, which it will perhaps be convenient for you to consider seriatim and favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to its value on each point, and as to the question whether it is of such a nature as would lead you to form an opinion other than that expressed by your predecessors in office, and whether the three positions stated above are correct and ought to be maintained.

With regard to the first position, namely, that the English Capitulations do not include the grant of favours accorded in the future to other nations, it appears that the XIth Article of the Treaty of Belgrade concedes to Austrian subjects the "privilège dont ont joui jusqu'à présent dans les États de l'Empire Ottoman les autres Chrétiens exempts de tribut, les nations même les plus amies, et principalement les Français, les Anglais, et les Hollandais." These words appear as little intended to convey future favours as the following, which constitute the corresponding portion of the English Capitulations:—

"All the Capitulations, privileges, and Articles granted to the French, Venetian and other Princes . . . . . having been in like manner . . . . . granted to the English, . . . . . the same shall be always observed . . . . ."

The meaning assigned to the words quoted above from the Austrian Treaty of 1739, known as the "Treaty of Belgrade," was, however, made clear from the Vth Article of the Treaty of 1784, the preamble of which states that one of the purposes of the Treaty was to explain the XIth Article of the Treaty of Belgrade. The explanatory Article is as follows:—

"The Sublime Porte declares, further, that under the Treaties of Belgrade and Passarowitz,* and in view of the good understanding existing between the two Courts, the Imperial and Royal Court is entitled to claim for its subjects, without exception, the same liberties, advantages, and favours which other Frankish nations, and in particular the French, the English, the Dutch, and the Russians, or any other more favoured nation enjoys, or may hereafter enjoy."

Mr. Fane states that in more recent times the Porte has repeatedly admitted that the Capitulations conveyed future privileges, and cites an extreme case which happened in 1839 when Austria claimed the right to such parts of the Anglo-Turkish Treaty of 1838 as suited her, while rejecting those parts which did not suit her. The Porte gave full satisfaction to the claim thus made.

Mr. Fane also observes that the preamble to the Treaty of 1840 between the Netherlands and Turkey shows that the Porte understood the Netherlands Capitulations as entitling the Low Countries to the advantages of the British and French Treaties of 1838, although the Dutch Capitulations are as silent as the English and Austrian Capitulations with regard to the grant of future favours.

I am therefore to inquire whether the additional information now adduced is such as to lead you to the opinion that British subjects are entitled under the English Capitulations, as apart from the stipulation in Article I of the Treaty of 1838, to the enjoyment of the favours granted by the Porte at any time to the subjects of any other foreign Power.

With regard to the second position, namely, that the stipulations of the Capitulations revive on the termination of a Treaty suspending or modifying them, I am to state that a special jurisprudence seems to have arisen on this point in the case of the Ottoman Capitulations. Otherwise, it would certainly appear that where a terminable Treaty takes the place of a perpetual Treaty, and the terminable Treaty does actually terminate, such termination could not revive the older Treaty; for the duration Article in the new Treaty—making the conventional relations between the Contracting Parties to be of limited duration—must presumably be taken as having been advisedly substituted for the corresponding Article, i.e., the duration Article in the old Treaty by which the conventional relations had been declared perpetual.

But, as concerns the Ottoman Capitulations, Sir E. Hertslet, in a Memorandum of the 9th ultimo, herewith transmitted to you,† states that—

"Her Majesty's Government have hitherto maintained that the Capitulations are perpetual in their nature and character, though temporarily suspended from time to time by the provisions of Treaties of limited duration, dealing with particular matters; and that in the event of such Treaties not being renewed, the operations of the Capitulations revives as regards matters dealt with by the lapsed Treaties."

---

* This Treaty (1718) does not appear, any more than that of Belgrade, to convey future favours.

† Sir E. Hertslet, August 9, 1889, Confidential No. 5905, p. 30.

A Russian diplomatic note, quoted by Mr. Fane, maintains the same doctrine. It is as follows:—

"Les Traités subséquents n'ont fait que confirmer et consacrer à nouveau les Capitulations. Si certaines clauses de ces dernières, ayant trait principalement aux relations commerciales, ont été modifiées par des Conventions conclues pour des termes limités, du moment où les termes de ces Conventions viennent à expirer, les modifications susdites perdent leur vigueur et les clauses des Capitulations, toujours virtuellement existantes, reprennent toute leur force et valeur."

Lord Salisbury would be glad to learn whether, in your opinion, the practice of the Porte with regard to the modification of the Capitulations by terminable Treaties would be sufficient, if shown to be constant, to establish, in respect to the former Instruments, the position that they revive on the termination of Treaties modifying them, even though such latter Treaties would, in the case of conventional Agreements with other countries, be held to have abrogated entirely and for ever the portions of the earlier Treaties of which they had taken the place.

The third position is that the Treaty of 1838, unlike the Capitulations, did not revive on the lapse of a Treaty, that, namely, of 1861, by which it was replaced.

Mr. Fane points out that the Treaty of 1838 is styled a "Convention appended to the Capitulations granted to Great Britain . . . . ," and argues that it is one of the "existing Capitulations and Treaties" referred to in the Ist Article of the Treaty of 1861, and must therefore be taken to be an integral part of the Capitulations incapable of being abrogated by a terminable Agreement. Other important arguments in favour of this view are the following:—

"Although several Powers copied the example of the British Treaty of 1861, and introduced into their corresponding Treaties Articles stating that their respective Treaties of 1861 were substituted for those of 1838, certain other Powers did not do so. Thus the French Treaty, far from containing any Article abrogating the Treaty of 1838, is described in the preamble as being "intended" to give, "by a special and additional Act, a fresh extension to the relations . . . . established . . . . by the Treaty of Commerce of 1838."*

Again, in Articles II and III of the Austrian Treaty corresponding to the British Treaty of 1861, the British and French Treaties of 1838 are referred to as being still in force. The Articles in question are as follows:—

"Article II. Il reste expressément entendu que les sujets de l'Autriche continueront à jouir comme par le passé, sauf les modifications apportées par la présente Convention, de tous les droits qui leur ont été conférés et garantis par l'accession de l'Autriche aux Traités de Commerce conclus par la Sublime Porte en 1838 avec l'Angleterre et avec la France.

"Article III. La Sublime Porte s'étant, en vertu de l'Article II des Traités conclus en 1838 avec l'Angleterre et avec la France (dont les stipulations, comme il a été dit à l'Article précédent, sont en vigueur aussi pour le commerce de l'Autriche) formellement engagée à abolir tous les monopoles ainsi que les 'teskérés.' . . . ."

Now the British Treaty of 1861 was "substituted for" the Treaty of 1838 on its ratification (see Article XX), namely, on the 9th July, 1861; but the Articles quoted above from the Austrian Treaty, which speak of the British Treaty as being also in force for Austrian commerce, and therefore still in force for British commerce, are from the Austrian Treaty bearing the date of the 22nd May, 1862, i.e., nearly a year after the British Treaty of 1838, would be assumed to have been abrogated.

Article II of the British Treaty of 1861 seems to allude to the Treaty of 1838 as being still in force. It says that "the Sublime Porte having, in virtue of the IInd Article of the Convention of 1838, formally engaged to abolish all monopolies as well as 'teskérés,' any attempt to compel British subjects to receive such 'teskérés' shall be considered as an infraction of Treaties."† This provision neither stipulates a new abolition of monopolies and "teskérés," nor renews a former abolition: it merely recites the previous abolition, and refers to the Treaty containing it as a separate Instrument still in force.

With regard to the Treaties concluded between the Sublime Porte and other Powers in 1861 and subsequent years, it may be noted that those with France (27th April, 1861), Portugal (23rd February, 1868), and Russia (3rd February, 1862), are silent as to any substitution thereof for the Treaties corresponding to the British Treaty of 1838; that certain others, namely, Hanse Towns (27th September, 1862), Netherlands (25th February, 1862), Portugal, Prussia (20th March, 1862), merely state that monopolies have been abolished without stating how or when; and that in the Russian Treaty the Porte "engages anew" to abolish monopolies.

† This appears as "an infraction of the Treaties" in the other corresponding Treaties.

Sir E. Hertslet, in the Memorandum already inclosed, expresses the opinion that the Treaty of 1838 was nevertheless abrogated by that of 1861. It appears from the accompanying Memorandum, prepared in this Office,* that the British Government originally intended merely to improve some of the provisions of the Treaty of 1838, but finally decided that the new Instrument was to "supersede" that Treaty. But it is, of course, possible that the word "supersede" was used in a limited sense with regard to the Treaty of 1838, as indeed it might have been used with regard to the Capitulations themselves, and merely meant that the Treaty of 1861 was to "supersede, during its continuance, the Treaty of 1838."

I am to inquire whether the information now submitted for your consideration enables you to form a definite opinion as to whether or not the Treaty of 1838 between Great Britain and Turkey was in fact extinguished by that of 1861, or whether it should be considered as an integral part of the Capitulations, and, as such, should be held to have revived on the termination of the Treaty of 1861.

I have, &c.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Capitulations entitle British subjects to enjoy favours granted to other nations.

That, in our opinion, the true construction of the Capitulations is that they do entitle British subjects (apart from the stipulation in Article I of the Treaty of 1838) to the enjoyment of favours granted by the Porte at any time to the subjects of any other foreign Power.

Capitulations revive on termination of Treaties modifying them.

Treaty of 1838 revived on termination of Treaty of 1861.

We are further of opinion that the practice of the Porte with regard to the modification of the Capitulations by terminable Treaties would be sufficient, if shown to be constant, to establish the position that the Capitulations revive on the termination of Treaties modifying them, even though a different conclusion might be come to in the case of ordinary Treaties with other countries. And we think that the Treaty of 1838 should be held to have revived on the termination of the Treaty of 1861.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, April 2, 1889.

Seizure of the "Admired" off the coast of Florida, and imposition of fine upon her master (for fishing). Claim of Messrs. Young and Higgs.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 5th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the seizure of the British schooner "Admired" last June off the coast of Florida by the United States' Revenue cutter "Crawford," and the imposition of a fine upon her master by the United States' authorities at Key West.

That the circumstances under which the seizure was alleged by the owners of the vessels to have taken place were to be found in their Memorial of the 10th September, 1888.

That from a despatch addressed to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies by the Officer administering the Government of the Bahamas it would appear that the British Vice-Consul at Key West had advised the owners to pay the fine, and that application should be made by the master to the authorities at Washington for its remission, but that those authorities had refused to remit the penalty.

That instructions were then sent out to Her Majesty's Minister at Washington to ascertain from the United States' Government the grounds on which the seizure had taken place, and the reasons for which the United States' authorities had declined to remit the fine.

That the reply of the United States' Government would be found in Mr. Herbert's despatch No. 379 of the 28th December, 1888.

That in his note dated the 18th December Mr. Bayard stated that the proceedings of the United States' authorities at Key West had been found to be correct, and forwarded certain documents intended to refute the allegation of the master of the "Admired," as to the circumstances under which the vessel was seized and the fine imposed.

Jurisdiction of United States within a league of the Fowey Rock involved.

That among the documents was a letter from the Custom-house Collector at Key West to the Commissioner of Navigation at Washington, dated the 17th November, 1888, and a letter from the Commander of the United States' Revenue steamer "Crawford" to the Collector of Customs at Key West, dated the 15th November, which seemed to involve a claim on the part of the United States' authorities to maritime jurisdiction beyond the generally recognized limit of a marine league from the mainland coast-line, and directly raised the question as to whether the rock or cay upon which the lighthouse known as the Fowey Light was erected, and within 3 miles of which the vessel was arrested, could properly be considered as a "natural appendage" of the coast of Florida within the meaning of Lord Stowell's Judgment in the case of the "Anna" (Christopher Robinson's Reports, vol. v, p. 373, A.D. 1805).

That it appeared from the Admiralty Chart annexed that the rock in question was between 5 and 6 nautical miles distant from Cape Florida on Cay Biscayne, about 6 miles from the nearest point of Sands Cay, and upwards of 10 miles from the nearest mainland on the coast of Florida.

That in the case of the "Anna" above alluded to the distance from the main shore at the mouth of the Mississippi of the mud-banks involved was not stated, and that it was not clear whether any of them were at a distance of more than a marine league from that shore or from each other, a matter which it was suggested might not be without some bearing on the general question.

That it was, however, pretty clear that the rock in the present case was one capable of being used by an enemy for some of the offensive purposes enumerated in Lord Stowell's Judgment, although it was presumed that the mere fact of the erection of a lighthouse upon it would not of itself afford a foundation for any claim to treat it as a natural appendage of the shores under the dominion of the State which erected such lighthouse.

That a Memorandum had been prepared in the Foreign Office bearing on the question as to whether maritime jurisdiction of States should be reckoned from the mainland or from the adjoining islands (see Sir E. Hertslet's Memorandum of the 2nd February, 1889).

That no action had yet been taken on Mr. Herbert's despatch, nor had the views of Her Majesty's Government on the representations received from Messrs. Young and Higgs yet been communicated to them.

That the circumstances of the case itself were of comparatively trifling importance, and were perhaps not such as would raise much sympathy with the master of the "Admired;" but that the grounds upon which the United States' authorities arrived at a decision adverse to that vessel appeared to import a claim on the part of the United States' Government to exclusive jurisdiction over the waters within a radius of a marine league from the Fowey Rock.

That a question of principle of grave importance was thus involved, and that the admission of such a claim in the present case might possibly, in the future, be used as a precedent against Her Majesty's Government of rather far-reaching extent.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the exclusive maritime jurisdiction of the United States within a radius of 3 miles from the Fowey Rock might safely be admitted; or, if not, whether a representation should be made to the United States' Government on behalf of the owners of the "Admired," and, if so, in what terms such representation, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, might most advantageously be couched.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and in obedience to your Lordship's commands have the honour to

Report—

Opposed to admission of United States' jurisdiction.

That, in the present state of our information as to the character of the Fowey Rock, and the neighbouring rocks and reefs, we could not advise the admission that the territorial jurisdiction of the United States extends 3 miles seaward of that rock.

Refusal to press claim not such an admission.

In the present case Her Majesty's Government will not, by declining to press the claim of Messrs Young and Higgs, make such an admission, as it is clearly stated by Captain Keene that, at the time when the vessel was captured, she was within 3 miles of the coast-line of the Cay Biscayne, which would bring her clearly within the jurisdiction of the United States.

No reason for further representation.

The matter appears to have been dealt with in due course of law, and we see no reason to believe that the decision of the Collector was wrong. We, therefore, do not advise the making of any further representation on behalf of the claimants.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received June 29.)

Royal Courts of Justice, June 28, 1889.

My Lord,

Assessment of light dues in Great Britain.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir James Fergusson's letter of the 8th April last stating that he had the honour, by direction of your Lordship, and with special reference to our Report of the 16th January, 1889, to transmit to us the papers, noted in the accompanying list, relative to the basis on which light dues were assessed in the United Kingdom.

That the inquiry made in the note of the 19th June, 1888, from the United States' Chargé d'Affaires, appeared to raise a very important question as to the general interpretation of the most-favoured-nation and national treatment clauses in Commercial Treaties, namely, whether exceptions might be made under those clauses other than such as were specifically expressed in the Treaties themselves.

That the inquiry made by Mr. Henry White would, in point of fact, appear to be practically as follows:—

Question as to admissibility of geographical discrimination.

"Is not the discrimination observed in the assessment of light dues in the United Kingdom treated by Her Majesty's Government as not falling within the most-favoured-nation clauses in British Treaties, and is it not so treated for the reason that it is based on the principle of discrimination by geographical situation and not by nationality?"

That it was suggested that the most-favoured-nation and national treatment clauses contained no words, on the face of them, which would serve to prevent the geographical discrimination, if once admitted, from being liable to be cited as a precedent for any discrimination not strictly based on the principle of nationality, and that it therefore became necessary further to consider whether a geographical discrimination was admissible, and, if so, how far the admission of a discrimination based on the principle of geographical situation might not necessarily involve the admissibility of other discriminations not based exclusively on the principle of nationality.

That in order to facilitate the consideration of that and other questions affecting the most-favoured-nation and national treatment clauses, a Memorandum (copy of which was inclosed) had been prepared in the Foreign Office. That in it would be found discussed a number of cases in which attempts had been made to establish discriminations of various kinds.

That Sir James Fergusson was to call particular attention to the extracts from diplomatic notes, which would be found at pp. 3 and 4 of that Memorandum, defining the object, extent, and effect of the clauses in question, and stating the intentions of the Governments of Great Britain and of the United States in negotiating the Treaty of 1815, which would appear to be one of the earliest Treaties containing those clauses in their modern form. That he was also to submit for consideration the observations at pp. 4 to 8 of the Memorandum regarding the interpretations of which the clauses were susceptible, as well as the paragraph headed "principle of the clauses" in which it was suggested that the most-favoured-nation and national treatment clauses, being similar in principle, precedents applying to the one, might be used, mutatis mutandis, for illustrating the other; and that, finally, he was to submit for consideration the cases involving geographical discrimination with regard to place of origin, discussed under heading (A) of the Memorandum.

Dangers of such admission.

That with reference to the observation contained in the second paragraph of our Report of the 16th January last, that the discrimination alluded to by Mr. Henry White had no reference to nationality, Sir James Fergusson was to inquire whether, in view of the cases now placed before us, and of the considerations submitted in the Memorandum, we were of opinion that that circumstance might safely and properly be alleged in justification of such discrimination; whether there was danger that a geographical discrimination, if once admitted, might constitute a precedent for discriminations similar in nature, but more extensive in effect, and for discriminations, other than geographical, which might in the end be destructive of the provisions of the Treaties.

That in that connection Sir James Fergusson was to observe that the second paragraph of the passage (quoted at page 17 of of the Memorandum) from the despatch No. 6, Commercial, of the 21st November, 1882, to Colonel Mansfield, which was submitted to and approved by our predecessors in office, was, it was believed, prompted by an analogous apprehension.

That in the second paragraph of our above-mentioned Report, we pointed out that consideration should be given to the fact of the scale of charges being framed in good faith, and with reference to the value to the undertaking of the benefit received, in respect of which the dues were charged; that in regard to that position Sir James Fergusson was to submit, for our consideration, that from one standpoint at any rate the length of the voyage appeared to have no reference to the benefit received by the ship from the lights she passed; that it was possible that the paragraphs at page 6 of the inclosed Memorandum, headed "safe and other discriminations," might be of use in considering that point.

That Sir James Fergusson was also to submit that although the discrimination involved in the assessment of light dues in the United Kingdom was doubtless made in good faith, it would probably be alleged by any Government making use of that discrimination as a precedent for other discriminations which might perchance be more open to objection, that the latter also were made in good faith, and that it would be difficult in practice to controvert such an allegation.

That it seemed, therefore, to be open to question, from the practical point of view, whether the length of the voyage was a proper and safe basis of assessment for navigation dues; and whether it might not be one which was likely to produce inequality of treatment between vessels, and should, for that reason, be, where possible, avoided.

That in connection with the fact that many of the schedules of dock and harbour dues authorized by Parliament contained differential charges varying in amount according to the length and nature of the voyage and the ports from which the vessels had traded, Sir James Fergusson was to submit the observations at p. 6 of the inclosed Memorandum, headed "Origin of False Interpretations," and the paragraph next after. Sir James Fergusson was to suggest that it was possible that a discrimination, which was none the less inadmissible under the Treaties, might exist for many years without remonstrance and even without being noticed.

That, with particular reference to the last suggestion, Sir James Fergusson was to call attention to the case No. 3 of heading (A) in the inclosed Memorandum, wherein it would be seen that a certain discrimination, which was held to be in violation of the Treaties, and on account of which Her Majesty's Government had to refund 88,000*l.* improperly levied, was, nevertheless, in harmony with the constant practice of Parliament.

That the most-favoured-nation clauses and national treatment clauses were of the greatest possible value to the trade of this country, and that in view of the fact that there was, at the present time, a marked tendency on the part of many Governments to pursue an illiberal and exclusive policy in regard to the trade and navigation of foreign countries, your Lordship was anxious that Her Majesty's Government should carefully abstain from defending any interpretations of those clauses, which might be the least open to doubt, and might hereafter be made use of as precedents for restricting the benefit derived from them by the trade and navigation of Great Britain.

That Sir James Fergusson was, therefore, to inquire whether, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government should consider the advisability of removing, so far as this country was concerned, the geographical element from the assessment of navigation and other dues on foreign trade and shipping.

That, in the event of our opinion being unfavourable, on general grounds, to the admissibility of a geographical discrimination, Sir James Fergusson was to inquire whether, in view of the precedents, and as a general rule, apart from particular stipulations, we would advise that Her Majesty's Government should contest the proposition that most-favoured-nation and national treatment clauses might be taken as admitting of any discrimination other than a discrimination by nationality: and whether, on the contrary, the clauses in question ought to be construed as meaning that no conditions other than those actually expressed in the Treaties might be demanded before the particular treatment stipulated for was conceded.

That our Report of the 16th January last, together with the papers therein referred to, was returned to us for convenience of reference.

That Sir James Fergusson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted therein, and with any general observations which we might desire to offer.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Adhere to opinion of 16th January.

That we have carefully reconsidered the terms of our Report of the 16th January last, and do not desire to alter or to qualify the opinion we then expressed; but we are sensible of the difficulty of discussing the question of good faith when examining Customs Regulations made by another Power.

Moreover, cases might arise in which a differential duty, varying with the place or port from which a ship has come, would operate so as to impose upon the produce of some country a burden which would, in effect, indirectly infringe the spirit of the most-favoured-nation clauses.

It is, therefore, a matter worthy of the gravest consideration whether it is expedient to maintain any discrimination of duties based on the principle of geographical situation.

National treatment clauses have no bearing on case.

We do not consider that national treatment clauses have any bearing upon this question, or that the precedents in the interpretation of such clauses can be considered as relevant. A national treatment clause—and we have no other with the United States—only entitles the foreign ship to the same treatment as the national ship, and no regulation which applies to both classes is a violation of this clause. But the most-favoured-nation clause is an undertaking that, when the foreign ship comes into port or the foreign goods are brought on shore, the lowest dues shall be charged which are according to the existing Tariff payable by such ship or such goods, whencesoever they may come. To allow geographical discrimination might give an indirect but none the less a real advantage to the ships and goods of one nation as against the other; but, in our opinion, no country would have the right to complain of the differential duty unless that country could show that the duty had the effect to its disadvantage to which we have referred.

When objections, under m.-f.-n. clauses, may be made to differential dues.

Opposed to maintenance of discriminating duties.

While, therefore, referring to our previous Report as stating the main argument upon which, in our view, such discrimination could be defended, we are of opinion that it is not advisable to maintain that principle, or to allow our own practice to be quoted in its support.

No. 61.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received June 29.)

Royal Courts of Justice, June 28, 1889.

My Lord,

Tonnage dues in United States.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir James Fergusson's letter of the 8th April last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list* with reference to the assessment of tonnage dues in respect of vessels arriving in United States' ports, a subject upon which we were good enough to favour your Lordship with a Report on the 7th May, 1888.

Right to claim rates under Act of 1884.

That it was gathered from the second paragraph of that Report that Her Majesty's Government had, in our opinion, the right to claim the benefit of the lower rates provided by the American Statute of the 26th June, 1884, for all British ships entering United States' ports from whatever port they might have sailed.

That before, however, availing himself of the language of that Report as the basis upon which to found any diplomatic claim, your Lordship would be obliged if we would further consider that question in connection with the very analogous point dealt with in our Report of the 16th January last respecting the assessment of light dues in the United Kingdom.

That it was thought that it might be convenient to us to consider both those questions at the same time, and that the precedents and considerations set out in the inclosed Memorandum might be equally of use to us in dealing with the question now at issue between Her Majesty's Government and that of the United States of America, as with reference to the assessment of British light dues which formed the subject of Sir James Fergusson's other letter to us of the 8th April last. That a notice of the United States' case would be found at p. 19 of that Memorandum.

View of United States' Government as to allowing discriminating treatment under m.-f.-n., &c., clauses.

That the manner in which the case was put before the Attorney-General of the United States, and the Report of the latter, seemed to show that the view now advanced by the United States would, if admitted, create a precedent for maintaining that any discrimination was allowable under the most-favoured-nation and national treatment clauses, provided it were not made strictly on the basis of nationality, and that even that restricted interpretation of those clauses was liable to be brought within yet narrower limits by the claim to make exceptions on account of geographical propinquity and "in the interests of good neighbourhood."

That with regard to the latter point, Sir James Fergusson was to submit the "general considerations" put forward at p. 23 of the inclosed Memorandum.

That in defence of the view now put forward by the United States, the reference to the Attorney-General appeals to the Treaty between the United States and Hawaii, to the German Customs Union, and to the so-called Canadian Reciprocity Treaty.

That should we think it necessary to consider that point, Sir James Fergusson was to submit the observations at pp. 40 and 45 of the inclosed Memorandum.

That with regard to the claims made by other countries for the extension to their ships of the lower rates of dues, Sir James Fergusson was to state that your Lordship had no information of a later date than that contained in Sir L. West's despatch No. 101, Commercial, of the 8th April, 1886.

That in the event of the interpretation which had, in the early part of Sir James Fergusson's letter, been placed upon the second paragraph of our Report of the 7th May, 1888, being correct, and should we, on consideration of the precedents now brought to our notice, be of opinion that the view of the most-favoured-nation and national treatment clauses put forward by the United States was erroneous, Sir James Fergusson was to request that we would favour your Lordship with an indication of the arguments which should be used in support of the claim that the lower rate of duties should be extended to all British ships, irrespective of the ports whence they might have sailed.

That our Report of the 7th May, 1888, and the papers therein referred to, were returned to us for convenience of reference.

That Sir James Fergusson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted therein, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and in obedience to your Lordship's commands have the honour to

Report—

United States' interpretation of Treaty of 1815 should be contested. Grounds for doing so.

Probable results of admitting United States' views.

That, in our opinion, the interpretation placed by the United States' Government upon the clause of the Treaty of 1815, which grants national treatment to the ships of the two countries respectively, should be contested upon the ground that the duties, or charges to be imposed in any port, are so imposed in respect of the service rendered to the ship by its reception and shelter in the port, and by its obtaining facilities thereby for the discharge of cargo, and that such charges must in principle be assessed with reference to the tonnage of the vessel, time in dock, value of the benefit received by, or service rendered to, the vessel, or similar considerations. Differential duties might be suggested depending upon the mode of construction of the vessel, and character of its equipment, or even the nationality of its crew, which might be contended to have no direct reference to the nationality of the vessel, but which might practically deprive British ships of the advantage which the Treaty was intended to secure. And if the narrow and technical interpretation of the Treaty which would admit of geographical distinctions were accepted, it would be possible to contend that a Regulation imposing special duties upon all ships, whether British or American, coming from the port of London, would not in strictness be a violation of the Treaty. Such a Regulation would, however, destroy the whole value of the clause, and we think the rule should be accepted and maintained that port authorities have nothing to do with the questions whence a vessel comes or whither it is going, and that a British ship is entitled to enter a United States' port on the most favourable terms of charge or of exemption which are enjoyed by any ship of the United States of like tonnage.

Necessity for consideration of question of dues.

We think it right to add that in view of the growing importance of this question in regard to recent legislation in the United States, and the fact that the difficulty of maintaining this position is increased by the circumstance that the practice of Great Britain has not been in complete accordance with it, it is very desirable that the question of the levying of harbour and other dues varying according to the geographical position of the place from which vessels have come should be carefully considered, and that negotiation with the United States should be entered upon in order to avoid the risk of serious controversy.

My Lord,

Seizure of Canadian sealers "Black Diamond" and "Triumph" in Behring's Sea by the United States' ship "Rush."

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir T. Sanderson's letter of the 20th ultimo, stating that, by your Lordship's direction, he had to transmit to us the inclosed draft of a despatch which it was proposed to address to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington with reference to the seizure of the Canadian vessels "Black Diamond" and "Triumph," in the Behring's Sea, by the United States' Revenue-cruizer "Rush."

That those seizures were, as would be seen from the accompanying papers,* similar in character to those of the ships "Caroline," "Onward," and "Thornton," which took place outside territorial waters in the summer of 1887, and which formed the subject of a Report to your Lordship from ourselves (of which a copy was also inclosed) on the 20th August of that year.

That Her Majesty's Government then protested against the proceedings in question, which appeared to be wholly unjustified by international law, but the United States' Government had hitherto abstained from offering any explanation of the grounds upon which those violent measures were adopted.

Submitting draft despatch.

That in view of that circumstance, and also of the unexpected renewal of the seizures of which Her Majesty's Government had already complained, your Lordship had considered it advisable that some further communication should now be made through Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires to the United States' Government; but, before transmitting to the former the despatch, of which the draft was inclosed, your Lordship desired to be favoured with our opinion as to whether its terms were such as were in the circumstances right and proper.

That Sir T. Sanderson was therefore to request that we would take the draft into our consideration, in connection with the other papers also transmitted therewith, and that we would favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with any observations which we might have to offer upon its terms and subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Report—

Approve despatch as altered.

Importance of more decided protest.

That, having regard to the communications which have passed between Mr. Edwardes and the Secretary of State for the United States, and the fact that it is proposed that Sir Julian Pauncefote shall, on his return, enter into the whole question, we are of opinion that (subject to the omission of the passage in brackets) the terms of the draft despatch are such as are right and proper. But we think it right to add that, in the absence of satisfactory arrangement or undertaking, it is from a legal point of view of importance that some more definite and decided protest should be made, or steps taken to prevent the recurrence of such seizures.

Annex.

[Draft to Mr. Edwardes as originally sent to Law Officers, and showing omission suggested and subsequent modification by Lord Salisbury into two Despatches, Nos. 205 and 206 of October 2, 1889.]

(No. .)

Foreign Office, October , 1889.

Sir,

IN my despatch No. 176 of the 17th ultimo I furnished you with copies of a correspondence which had passed between this Department and the Colonial Office on the subject of the seizure of the Canadian vessels "Black Diamond" and "Triumph," in the Behring's Sea, by the United States' Revenue-cutter "Rush."

---

* Colonial Office, September 10, 1889; Law Officers, August 20, 1887, Confidential No. 5597, p. 97.

1889

I have now received, and transmit herewith, copies of a despatch from the Governor-General of Canada to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, which incloses copies of the instructions given to the special officer placed on board the "Black Diamond" by the officer commanding the "Rush," and of a letter from the Collector of Customs at Victoria, together with the sworn affidavits of the masters of the two Canadian vessels.

It is apparent from these affidavits that the vessels were seized at a distance from land far in excess of the limit of maritime jurisdiction which any nation can claim by international law.

The cases are similar in this respect to those of the ships "Caroline," "Onward," and "Thornton," which were seized by a vessel of the United States outside territorial waters in the summer of 1887. In a despatch to Sir L. West, which was communicated to Mr. Bayard, dated the 10th September, 1887, I drew the attention of the Government of the United States to the illegality of these proceedings, and expressed a hope that due compensation would be awarded to the subjects of Her Majesty who had suffered from them. I have not since that time received from the Government of the United States any intimation of their intentions in this respect, or any explanation of the grounds upon which this interference with British vessels had been authorized. Mr. Bayard did, indeed, communicate to me unofficially an assurance that no further seizures of this character should take place pending the discussion of the questions involved between the two Governments. Her Majesty's Government much regret to find that this understanding has not been carried forward into the present year, and that instructions have been issued to cruizers of the United States to seize British vessels fishing for seals in Behring's Sea outside the limit of territorial waters. The grounds upon which these violent measures have been taken have not been communicated to Her Majesty's Government, and remain still unexplained.

[~~I will not anticipate the result of the legal proceedings now pending before the Supreme Court of the United States, and, until they are concluded, will refrain from discussing the claims for compensation which have been acquired by those whose property has been taken and whose industry has been arrested~~; ~~but~~]

In view of the unexpected renewal of the seizures of which Her Majesty's Government have previously complained, it is my duty to protest against them, and to state that, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, they are wholly unjustified by international law.

[Second Despatch.]

At the time when the seizures of 1886 and 1887 were the subjects of discussion, the Minister of the United States made certain overtures to Her Majesty's Government with respect to the institution of a close time for the seal fishery, for the purpose of preventing the extirpation of the species in that part of the world. Without in any way admitting that considerations of this order could justify the seizure of vessels which were transgressing no rule of international law, Her Majesty's Government were very ready to agree that the subject was one deserving of the gravest attention on the parts of all the Governments interested in those waters. The Russian Government were disposed to join in the proposed negotiations; but they were suspended for a time in consequence of objections raised by the Dominion of Canada, and of doubts thrown on the physical data on which any restrictive legislation must have been based. Her Majesty's Government are fully sensible of the importance of this question, and of the great value which will attach to an international agreement in respect to it; and Her Majesty's Representative will be furnished with the requisite instructions in case the Secretary of State should be willing to enter upon the discussion.

You will read this despatch and my despatch No. of this day's date to the Secretary of State, and, if he should desire it, you are authorized to give him copies of them.

Royal Courts of Justice, September 30, 1889.

My Lord,

Claim of "The Venezuela-Panamá Gold Mine Co." on account of loss caused by illegal action of the President.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 4th instant, stating that, by direction of your Lordship, he transmitted to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, which related to the confiscation, by a Decree of the Venezuelan Courts, of the property of a Company formed in the month of December 1882, under the name of "The Venezuela-Panamá Gold Mine Company (Limited)."

That the circumstances of the case were explained to us in Sir Villiers Lister's letter of the 14th November, 1887, and that, in our reply, dated the 28th of that month (Print, p. 190), we expressed the opinion "that as the legal questions arising in this matter have been considered and dealt with by Courts of competent jurisdiction, there is not, in the absence of sufficient evidence of corruption or misconduct on the part of such Courts, any ground for diplomatic intervention."

Further correspondence as to.

That a further representation had been received from Mr. Grigg, late Secretary, and now a liquidator of the Company, renewing the previous application of the Company for the intervention of Her Majesty's Government to procure restitution of the property. (Mr. Grigg, August 27, 1889.)

Does it modify previous opinion?

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted therewith into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion, whether the statement contained in Mr. Grigg's letter of the 27th ultimo altered our previous opinion contained in our letter of the 28th November, 1887, or whether the parties interested should be informed that they must have recourse to the legal remedies which it would appear, from Mr. Grigg's letter, were still open to them.

That your Lordship would be glad also to be favoured with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Report—

Adhere to opinion against intervention.

That the statements contained in Mr. Grigg's letter of the 27th August do not alter our previous opinion that the circumstances of the case do not afford any sufficient ground for diplomatic intervention.

My Lord,

Zanzibar blockade. Points of law raised by France as to:

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 11th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a note from the French Ambassador and other papers (as marked in the margin)* relating to the blockade established on the coast of the continental dominions of His Highness the Sultan of Zanzibar, referred to in his letter of the 8th December last respecting the Zanzibar Prize Court Order in Council.

That we would observe that in his note M. Waddington stated that the French Government held—

1. Valid notice.

1. That a French vessel would not be considered as having valid notice of the blockade unless an individual notice had been given in each case, and noted upon the ship's papers by an officer of the blockading force; and

2. Right of search for contraband of war.

2. That the right of search for contraband of war must be exercised by an officer, and only within the limits of the blockade (" zône du blocus ").

That the blockade was officially notified to the French Government, and that it was believed that the above rules differed from those followed by Great Britain in the case of a belligerent blockade by Her Majesty's naval forces, and from the practice of the United States and some other nations (see Sir Travers Twiss' " Law of Nations in Time of War," section 104, p. 201, and Hall's " International Law," p. 612).

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the reply which should be returned to the French Ambassador upon the particular points of maritime law thus raised, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the subject.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

Her Majesty's Government should not accept rule as to necessity of individual notice;

1. That, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government should, in replying to M. Waddington's letter, decline to accept the rule that individual notice of the blockade is required before vessels can be seized for its infraction.

It is, in each case, a question of fact whether a vessel attempting to enter a blockaded port is to be considered, having regard to the length and direction of her voyage, the date of the institution of the blockade, and the steps which have been taken to give public notice of it, as having received such notice. If she can reasonably be supposed to have received no such notice she is then entitled, on being warned, to renounce her voyage. The question cannot arise with regard to vessels seeking to leave blockaded ports; they will, of course, be liable to seizure.

or as to limitation of right of search to zone of blockade.

2. Nor is it possible to admit the rule suggested by M. Waddington, that the belligerent right of search for contraband of war can only be exercised within the zone of blockade. It is a right which may be exercised at the will of the belligerent wherever (except in the territorial waters of neutral Powers), he may find a vessel which he suspects of carrying contraband of war to his enemy. But the institution of a blockade creates a fresh right, that of preventing the ingress or egress of vessels to or from the blockaded port.

No right to search vessels under French flag for slaves.

We understand that it is the practice to hand over to French cruizers any vessels, rightfully carrying the French flag, which are discovered to be engaged in the Slave Trade, and while we are of opinion that when the French nationality of the vessel is established no right exists to search for slaves, we cannot doubt, having regard to the joint action taken by both countries for the suppression of the Slave Trade in the year

1845, that France would willingly acquiesce in steps taken in good faith to ascertain if her flag was used to cover this Traffic.

No. 65.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received February 22.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, February 22, 1889.

Intended Proclamation of martial law by Germany in parts of Zanzibar territories.

Scope of Proclamation not clear.

That the exact extent of country which it was proposed to embrace under the above words, and to subject, consequently, to " martial law," was not at present quite clear; that it was possible that the operation of the Proclamation was intended to be confined to the ports of Dar-es-Salaam and Bagamoyo, with their immediate environs, but that, on the other hand, it might be in contemplation to give it a much more extensive scope.

That the ports in question were both situate in that portion of the dominions of the Sultan of Zanzibar which was within the German sphere of influence, and that the German East Africa Company had a trading establishment at either place.

That both towns were practically besieged by a number of insurgent Arabs and other tribesmen, who were encamped in their vicinity, and that it had been found necessary for the protection of the agents and servants of the Company against their attacks, and for the preservation of the Company's property, to maintain a German ship of war off either port, and to land sailors and marines from time to time to assist the Company in garrisoning their establishment.

Martial law, its meaning

That it was presumed that the expression " martial law," in Count Leyden's note, was employed in the strict sense of that term, as understood by continental nations, and that the German Imperial Government intended thereby to denote the conditions of military law and usage which were incident to that state intermediate between peace and war, called by continental jurists a " state of siege," and that the result of its proclamation over a particular district would be to supersede and suspend all civil law and authority for the time being, and to establish in substitution therefor, within such district, military law and the customs of war. [See Halleck's " International Law, Ed. of 1878, vol. i, p. 499; " Manual of Military Law," published by the War Office in 1887; " Dicey's Law of the Constitution," (2nd Ed.), pp. 296, 297, and 300-301, and other authorities there quoted.] and administration.

That it was assumed that such "martial law" could only be administered by regularly constituted military authorities, and required for its efficient conduct a more or less complete military occupation of the district over which it was proclaimed, and that it appeared doubtful whether the state of affairs which had been described as at present existing at Dar-es-Salaam and Bagamoyo, could be held to amount to a military occupation of those districts by the German forces.

Necessity for Sultan's authority.

That, moreover, Count Leyden's note seemed to contemplate a Proclamation which should be issued by the German Imperial Government "mero motu," and without reference apparently to the Sultan of Zanzibar, in whose name alone, as de jure Sovereign over the districts involved, could, as was suggested, such a Proclamation be issued, although (as in the case of the blockade of the Sultan's coasts which was lately established by the British and German Governments in alliance with the Sultan, but which was being carried out entirely by the fleets of the two former nations) the " martial law," when thus proclaimed, might doubtless be carried out by the German Imperial forces acting as allies of the Sultan.

That, having regard also to the numbers of British Indian subjects and protected persons who were probably still more or less frequenting those districts, and to the state of feeling amongst them with reference to the German operations, some misgivings were entertained as to whether the strict administration of such a system as was now suggested by the German Government might not lead to inconvenient and embarrassing complications between Her Majesty's Government and that of Germany.

That your Lordship, therefore, desired before replying to Count Leyden's communication to be favoured with our opinion (1) as to whether the assent of Her Majesty's Government to the proposed measure (which had been invited by the German Government) could properly be given, or should be withheld until more precise information on the subject had been supplied; and (2) as to whether the proposed proclamation of martial law, if made, should not, by whomsoever eventually enforced, in any case be promulgated in the name of the Sultan of Zanzibar.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was, in those circumstances, to request that we would take the inclosed note into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted in his letter, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to Clearer information necessary before assenting to proposal.

That in our opinion the assent of Her Majesty's Government to the proposed proclamation of martial law in the districts mentioned should be withheld until some clearer statement is obtained as to the measures it is proposed to take, and the extent of territory to which such proclamation shall apply.

Definition of martial law.

Martial law is the assumption by a commanding officer of absolute power in territories which at the time are in possession of the Sovereign whom he represents, and in which, for military reasons, the ordinary course of law is suspended. (See Bluntschli, Articles 539–547.)

We doubt whether this is what is really contemplated so far as we can judge from Count Leyden's letter.

Authority of the Sultan necessary.

2. Under the circumstances stated to us it appears that martial law can only be proclaimed, if at all, by the authority of the Sultan of Zanzibar.

My Lord,

Slave labour. Proclamation of Consul-General.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, and together with other papers bearing thereon,[*] the inclosed copy of a Proclamation which was issued by Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar on the 9th November last under circumstances which would be found concisely explained in the accompanying Memorandum.

That it would be seen that the Proclamation in question "gives warning that, under section 370 of the Indian Penal Code, any British subject who makes a contract with the owner of a slave for the labour of such slave commits an offence which, under that section, is punishable with imprisonment which may extend to seven years and be accompanied by a fine."

That the section (section 370) of the Indian Penal Code alluded to was incorporated by schedule in the Imperial Act 39 & 40 Vict., cap. 46 ("The Slave Trade Offences (India) Act"), which applied to Zanzibar, and provided that, "whoever imports, exports, removes, buys, sells, or disposes of any person as a slave, or accepts, receives, or detains against his will any person as a slave, shall be punished with imprisonment . . . . . for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to a fine."

Doubts as to its correctness.

That doubt was felt as to whether the language of the Proclamation referred to was justified by the terms of the section upon which it purported to be founded, and that, having regard also to the fact that its issue had aroused considerable excitement and opposition amongst British and British Indian traders resident at Zanzibar (see Petition of Mr. G. S. Mackenzie and others inclosed in Colonel Euan-Smith's No. 374 of the 15th December, 1888), the question arose as to whether, under all the circumstances, it might not be advisable to withdraw it Proposed withdrawal of Proclamation.

That your Lordship would therefore desire to be favoured with our opinion as to the propriety of adopting that course; and that, should we consider that it was desirable to withdraw the Proclamation, your Lordship would be glad to be further favoured with our opinion as to whether the withdrawal might not advantageously be effected by the substitution of another Proclamation, merely reciting the precise words of the section of the Indian Penal Code to which Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General desired to draw attention.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted in that letter, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

Desirable to withdraw Proclamation and issue a substitute, and to inform Consul-General of its incorrectness.

That, in our opinion, it will be desirable to withdraw the Proclamation by substituting another in which the terms of section 370 of the Indian Penal Code are set out.

It is important that the Consul-General should be clearly informed that the second, third, and fourth sentences of his Proclamation do not correctly represent the law.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received March 16.)

Royal Courts of Justice, March 14, 1889.

My Lord,

British vessel hired as tender to German blockading squadron.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin,[*] with reference to a question which had arisen as to whether a British steamer, hired by the Admiral in command of the German squadron now engaged in the blockade of the Zanzibar coast for the purpose of acting as a tender to his fleet, should be permitted to fly the German ensign, with badge for chartered vessels, during the period of her service under charter.

That the vessel, which was hired at Bombay, had proceeded to Zanzibar, where, although retaining her British crew as part of her complement, she had been placed by the German Admiral under the command of an officer in the German Imperial navy.

That the Admiral had, however, stated, in answer to inquiries addressed to him upon the subject by Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar, that the tender would not form part of the German fleet, and that such of the members of her crew as were British subjects would not be considered amenable to German military law.

That by section 105 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854" (17 & 18 Vict., cap. 104), it was made an offence for any British ship to fly "any colours resembling those of Her Majesty, or any distinctive national colours," without a warrant for so doing from Her Majesty, or from the Admiralty, but that it seemed doubtful how far the wording of that section was to be considered applicable to a case of this kind.

That it was presumed that, as the assumption of the flag in question in the present case could not, if made, be said to be done either "with intent to conceal the British character of such ship from any person entitled by British law to inquire into the same, or to assume a foreign character," &c., and that therefore section 103, sub-section (2) of the above-mentioned Statute had no application.

That Sir Philip Currie was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the vessel in question might, having regard to all the circumstances, be safely permitted to fly the German ensign, with badge for chartered vessels, during such time as her employment under charter by the German Government might continue, and, at the same time, to add any general observations which we might desire to offer on the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and in obedience to your Lordship's commands have the honour to

Report—

She may fly German ensign, &c., subject to grant of a formal warrant by Admiralty.

That, in our opinion, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, there is no objection to the ship being permitted to carry the German colours, with badge for chartered vessels, but we think a formal warrant, under section 105 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," granting this permission, should be given by the Admiralty.
